Tex Carleton to Hurl for Cubs Today, While Tigers Will Start Alvin Crowder on Mound; Both Teams Face Crucial Test.

Chicago, Oct. 4.—Pounding hearts of 45,532 baseball fans, skipping a beat from sheer excitement, today throbbed to the thrill of two ball teams turning back the clock to the rough-and-ready era of baseball before the Detroit Tigers were able to accomplish the downfall of the Chicago Cubs in an eleven-inning struggle.

By the score of 6 to 5 the Tigers won the contest to take a 2-1 lead in the World Series, but as the 45,532 filed from the park it was in a daze produced by the rapid-moving scenes that ended with the sour note of a Cub error in the eleventh.

Off the bat of Jo Jo White, Detroit center fielder, bounced the hit—a single to center field—that gave Marvin Owen license to score from second base, but it was a town-lot muff by Freddy Lindstrom, called in from center field to play third base in the last two innings, that paved the way for the Tiger triumph. With one out, Lindstrom had booted Clifton's mild grounder that advanced Owen to second.

Since the sixth inning the Cubs had been leaderless. Amid a wild scene at second base, Umpire George Moriarty chased Manager Charley Grimm out of the park when Grimm protested an unfavorable decision on Phil Cavaretta's attempted steal.

Two innings later, Morarity, heckled persistently by the Cubs, stormed into the Chicago dugout, pointing an accusing finger at Capt. Woody English, upon whom the management of the club had developed after Grimm's ouster, and banished English from the park.

It was at that point that the umpire baiting reached a new high in baseball. With wildly waving arms, Moriarty threatened to clear the entire Cub bench in that eighth inning, but was met by a chorus of yapping tongues that left him rednecked. It appeared that he would be forced to call the police, on the order of Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis, to enforce his order for English to leave the park.

Cooler heads persuaded the Cubs' captain to depart for the

3 Horses End Steeplechase Noses Apart

Dundrillin, Clifton's Queen and Anchors Aweigh in Laurel Thriller.

By Walter Haight,
A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 4.—When three horses run 2 miles, make 14 jumps and then finish noses apart, the race becomes the day's feature. That is what happened at Laurel today. When Racing Secretary John P. Turner arranged the program, he placed Magothy in the feature position, but he did not forsee three courageous animals, tired from their strenuous task, throwing their noses at the imaginary wire, giving their all along with their riders. Truly, it was the last word in steeplechase finishes and old-timers could remember nothing to match it.

Dundrillin, Clifton's Queen and Anchors Aweigh were the three horses that thrilled a crowd of 7,500 and the judges had to separate

Rules on Labor Relaxed to Aid Work Projects

Shortage of Skilled Men on Relief Creates New Job Problm.

The second modification in rigid relief standards previously fixed for the dragging works program was ordered yesterday on PWA projects by Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, as the problem of finding skilled workmen became a paramount obstacle in the Federal job drive.

The PWA was advised by Hopkins' organization that it no longer will be required to draw 90 per cent of its labor from public relief rolls. Earlier, the $100,000,000 PWA slum clearance program had been exempted from relief requirements.

The Works Progress Administration, however, steadfastly refused to modify stiff relief requirements imposed on its own broad works-relief program, despite the fact that difficulty in finding skilled workers on public relief, strategically located near proposed projects, is proving an impediment in speeding the program.

Some changes in procedure may have to be made, however, if the WPA is to fulfill the President's promise of putting 3,500,000 persons to work by November 1. Figures made available Thursday showed that with but four weeks to go, only 1,126,234 had been put to work.

Coincident with the PWA modification in relief requirements, orders were issued preserving the "prevailing wage" principle on public works, to insure uniform wage regulations on new PWA non-Federal projects to be financed under the national recovery act, and those under the $4,000,000,000 works relief act.

Amelioration of requirements governing selection of PWA help from relief rolls was said to have been ordered following complaints of

Hull Sets Up System To License All Arms

Secretary Issues Rules on Making and Shipping of Munitions; Presidential Proclamation of Italo-Ethiopian Embargo Expected Soon.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

With a presidential proclamation making effective an embargo on arms shipments to both Italy and Ethiopia expected momentarily, Secretary of State Cordell Hull last night promulgated regulations governing the permanent system for licensing the manufacture, export and import of arms, ammunition and implements of war which becomes effective November 29.

This action completed the establishment of machinery necessary to give effect to Section 2 of the neutrality act adopted by Congress in August, which makes it unlawful after November 29 to engage in the manufacture of arms, ammunition and implements of war, or in their exportation or importation, without a license from the Secretary of State.

President Roosevelt on September 25 issued a proclamation enumerating the articles included in the term "arms, ammunition and implements of war," and Secretary Hull, in his regulations last night, specified that the manufacturers, exporters or importers of these articles must register with his department before November 29, or after that date before engaging in such business.

The new regulations become effective as of October 10 in relation to the exportation of arms to Bolivia, China, Cuba, Honduras, Nicaragua and Paraguay, superceding regulations now in effect. Exportation of arms to Bolivia and Paraguay is absolutely forbidden now under a presidential proclamation, and is subject to restrictions in regard to the other countries.

Establishment of the present arms and munitions licensing system has no direct connection with either the Italo-Ethiopian crisis or the obligation of the President to make effective an arms embargo against warring countries, contained in Section 1 of the neutral-

Planes Bomb Border Posts Of Ethiopians

U.S. Flier, With Dispatches to Capital, Fights Off Italian Aviators.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Oct. 4.—Fresh Italian onslaughts from the sky in new sectors spread death and destruction today in Ethiopia. In the north and to the southeast Fascist planes wheeled over Ethiopian outposts to drop powerful bombs. The planes also were utilized to disseminate propaganda among native villages.

Two Italian planes bombed the frontier post of Yamadia, near Setit, Alkait Province, northern Ethiopia. Nine soldiers and two telephonists were injured. A radio station was damaged at Gorrahe, Ogaden Province, by the sky raiders. Casualties were estimated at 200 by the Exchange Telegraph Agency.

Frontier posts at Jamadia, where six were wounded, and at Korahle and Gerloguib, in Ogaden Province, also were reported damaged by the missiles.

Italian pilots who bombed Aduwa dropped pamphlets in Amharic asserting "the Italian government will become great and those who touch it will be destroyed."

Italians captured Maibaria, the government announced, and it was

France Agrees To Aid Britain On Sanctions

Pledge of Geneva Support Avoids Commitment on Any Naval Incident.

By the United Press.

Paris, Oct. 4.—The French government tonight formally decided to stand with England at Geneva in applying the penalties provided in the Covenant in the League of Nations against Italy because of her attack upon Ethiopia.

The decision was not unqualified, however, and it does not mean that France is prepared to let the League hasten to the ultimate application of military pressure upon Italy under Article XVI of the Covenant.

France still hopes that delay will enable her to prevent the Italo-Ethiopian conflict from spreading into an Italo-British war, which, she realizes, would mean a new world struggle worse than the holocaust that ended in 1918.

France's formal decision was made by the cabinet late today. The ministers approved the text of a note drafted by Premiere and Foreign Minister Pierre Laval in reply to Britain's demand that France agree specifically to support Britain against a possible Italian attack in the Mediterranean. The note was not made public, but it was learned that its text is equivocal.

The tenor of the note is essentially general, It does not reply specifically to any of the British questions about collaboration of British and French fleets. Contrarily, it emphasizes that while Franco-British co-operation is necessary, thorough conversations must precede any binding engagements.

Geneva seems designated as the setting for these negotiations.

Laval left for Geneva tonight confident that he had won an outstanding personal victory. The cabinet approved what he has done to date, including his conversation of last night with Capt. Anthony Eden,

Il Duce's Hordes Prepare to Sever Franco-Abyssinian Railroad, Only Modern Link With Outside World; Sons Play Part in Attacks.

By the Associated Press.

Asmara, Eritrea, Oct. 4.—The mighty armies of Il Duce tonight swarmed in the hills of vengeance above Aduwa—ready, Italian sources declared, to seize and humble that proud village at any moment.

Ten miles from the 7,500-foot high "Verdun of Ethiopia," where savage black warriors all but massacred an Italian force of 18,000 men 39 years ago, the fighting Fascist columns (an estimated 100,000 troops) commanded all approaches to the sloping Aduwa plain.

Death spat from the smoking guns of their relentless, lumbering tanks as the avengers of Aduwa pressed on into the highlands. They marched to the grim symphony of droning bombers, to the echoing burst of lethal projectiles on the fortifications of Aduwa and other panic-ruled settlements.

(In Rome an Italian government spokesman said the Italians were meeting stiff resistance at Aduwa, but expected it would fall tomorrow or Sunday. He announced the capture of Adigrat, 25 miles to the east.)

(Reports from Addis Ababa told of the occupation by Italians of both Mabaria and Mount Rama and the bombing of these objectives from the air. Emperor Haile Selassie charged these bombs killed women and children. He also reported a battle in the southeast, in Ogaden Province, with 200 casualties on each side. Reuter's Addis Ababa correspondent said an Italian plane had been shot down near Aduwa. Exchange Telegraph said the Ethiopian commander had reported to Addis Ababa, "Can't hold out much longer under heavy artillery bombardment.")

30,000 Mass on Border.

On eastern and southern fronts, too, authoritative sources said the Italian hordes were marching.

Thirty thousand troops, equipped with the new "scooter" tanks which travel 45 miles an hour and which carry two machine guns each, massed on the border of Italian Somaliland, to the east, ready to press on into the rich province of Aussa.

Other forces awaited orders for a drive on Harar, focal city of the province of that name, planning to cut the Franco-Ethiopian railway from Addis Ababa to Djibouti, French Somaliland. That is Addis Ababa's only modern connection with the rest of the world.

Bombing planes at Assab and other strategic centers were ready to load high-explosive bombs to bombard railway bridges over the Hawash River.

"Very Heavy Casualties."

There were reports, too, of another concentration of Italian fighters at Ualual, where a border battle last December touched off the Italo-Ethiopian quarrel.

"Very heavy casualties," Italians said, were inflicted as tanks led an army reported to be 100,000 strong into the hills about Aduwa.

Cavalry and infantry forces already in position held their ground. They had climbed into Ethiopia's rugged, natural defenses behind a swift flight by the "Lion's Head" air squadron in which Vittorio and Bruno Mussolini, sons of Mussolini, participated. The squadron's mission, it was announced, was "brilliantly completed."

Count Galleazzo Ciano, son-in-law of Il Duce, bombed the Aduwa fortifications; then flew over Adigrat, said an official version of yesterday's thrust from the air.

"There he dropped his remaining bombs upon an armed group as the fortifications directed a heavy fire at his plane," said this version. "The squadron returned to

Il Duce Moves To Keep Battle Out of Europe

Sends Aloisi Back to Geneva and Warns France on Hasty Sanctions.

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Oct. 4.—Benito Mussolini maneuvered at home today to keep war from spreading in Europe as Italy's Fascist legions drove forward in Ethiopia, taking one town and preparing to capture another tomorrow.

Ethiopian warriors are making strong resistance at Aduwa, where an Italian army was crushed in 1896, an official spokesman said. In front of the stronghold tribesmen have entrenched themselves and are maintaining rifle and machine-gun fire.

Adrigat, 25 miles east of Aduwa, has fallen into Black Shirt hands, the spokesman said, and a number of villages were occupied peacefully. No mention was made of casualties in the engagements.

Black Shirts all over Rome impatiently awaited news of the fall of Aduwa. They were called to their various headquarters tonight to make preparations for a celebration of victory, but the expected word did not come. The Fascists then gave a demonstration of friendship to France before the palace occupied by the French Ambassador.

Several thousand Fascists, led by a group of Black Shirts in uniform, chanted "Viva Francia" and "Duce, Duce." This demonstration was planned to thank France for what Rome viewed as her mild position toward sanctions.

The advance Italian army sent word to a proud homeland of a "victorious entry" into the enemy territory. An official report said the soldiers went forward "all along the front."

Il Duce's Sons in Advance

Count Galeazzo Ciano, son-in-law of Il Duce, and Il Duce's two sons, Vittorio and Bruno, were reported to have led aerial forces that bombarded Aduwa and reconnoitered far beyond.

Behind them came a modern army, which moved forward 20 kilometers (nearly 13 miles) yesterday and advanced again at dawn today to near Aduwa.

A communique said the Italians met little resistance from Ethiopian tribesmen. Inhabitants of native villages waved white flags at the approach of the invaders, the communique reported. Natives were described as in "a state of extreme misery" and arrangements were made to give them food. Leaflets

League Ready To Brand Italy The Aggressor

Council May Act on Report Late Today, Begin Steps for Sanctions.

By the United Press.

Geneva, Oct. 4.—The council of the League of Nations tonight was ready to brand Italy guilty of an unjustified attack upon Ethiopia and to start moving the cumbersome machinery of the League to punish her.

This machinery can lead, under provisions of Article XVI of the League covenant, to joint military action against Premier Benito Mussolini and his Fascist legions. Such action, however, is not likely to come and if it does come it probably will be long delayed.

France especially does not want to fight Italy and France is a powerful charter member of the League. England, too, does not want to fight, but she is ready to do so in unison with the other powers if less forceful measures fail to curb the ambition of the Italian dictator.

As the situation stood tonight the committee of 13 appointed by the League to study the dispute was completing its report, which may be adopted by the Council late tomorrow.

Probable Course.

In view of the decision of the French cabinet to stand with England in working through the League to curb Italy these developments seemed probable:

1. The League will find Italy guilty of aggression—its way of saying that Mussolini has started a war on Ethiopia without justification.

2. The Council and the Assembly then will vote to apply the provisions of the Covenant. This will be done gradually, beginning with investigations and leading up to economic pressure which might eventually reach a complete boycott of Italy—a refusal of the League nations to sell anything to Italy or buy anything from her. The final step would be to send the armies of the League powers against Mussoloni and destroy him.

All this will take weeks if not months. International rivalries are such that delay and more delay will be sought.

The council's agenda for tomorrow was officially announced as:

1. Consideration of the subcommittee's report on the Italo-Ethiopian dispute.

2. Examination of other political repercussions of the Italo-Ethopian situation.

3. Consideration of the communications about the dispute which have been received from the Italian and Ethiopian governments.

Communications from the two governments continued today.

Charges "Massacre."

Emperor Haile Selassie, of Ethiopia again telegraphed the League charging Italy with brutal aggression and the massacre of defenseless women and children. "Italy today is beginning to carry out her openly proclaimed threats to conquer unarmed Ethiopia," the Emperor said.

Italy's telegram said her troops merely had advanced into disputed territory.

It was apparent that when Baron Pompeo Aloisi, of Italy and Tecla Hawariat, of Ethiopia face each other at the Council table tomorrow the lie must be exchanged—for Ethiopia's charges and Italy's defense are flatly opposed.

Between You and Me

Riches, Poverty Flourish on Coast; Relief Gains; Stresses Permanent Jobless Problem.

By Raymond Clapper

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Oct. 4.—Prosperity and poverty get along side by side here in Southern California and both are doing nicely, with little to complain about.

Saving the sweeter items for the later course, the bad news is essentially this:

Los Angeles has 652,676 families. On September 28, 139,265 of these families were on charity—an average family of three drawing $37.42 per month. Not enough to live in luxury, certainly, but the climate is mild, there is a large "swap" organization where poverty-stricken families can trade all sorts of things. It is developing into an elaborate co-operative system entirely outside the regular competitive world around it. Healthful climate does much to ameliorate the punishment in health and comfort which most relief clients have to take in other localities.

No one thinks this is an ideal situation, but they are becoming more reconciled to its continuance. Feeling that it will be impossible to put many of these idle back to work grows stronger. For instance, 80 per cent of the former salesmen who are on relief are 45 years old or over. Not many of those will see large incomes again. Many will never see any at all. Good domestics are all back at work. Those left over are no good. Couldn't hold a job in normal times, and probably will have to be cared for. The same thing is true in varying degrees of other occupational groups.

Here's another sad fact: Relief cases on September 28 numbered 139,265 (most cases representing families of two or more persons). On June 1, 1934, the number on relief was 108,276. That is an increase of 30,989 cases—28.62 per cent. Largely, the increase represents exhausted savings. These cases do not include those aided for part of a year. The daily case load gives no indication of total families aided within a year's period. Persons working part-time, and drawing little more in wages than they would in relief are not included. You don't wonder that Upton Sinclair's campaign to end poverty appeals to so many people out here.

Whole sections of Los Angeles exist where more than half of the people are on a charity level.

The Los Angeles Times, in making a survey for its own purposes more than a year ago, attempted to arrive at the number of families which might be called "charity families"—that is, families either on relief or of such meager and sporadic earning power as to be entirely eliminated as prospects for advertisers. The Times estimated this group at 260,206 families, or 39.87 per cent of the total number of families in Los Angeles County. They broke the city up into sections and found one district with 58.32 per cent in this charity class, one running 79.27 per cent, which is practically eight out of ten persons, others averaging 70 per cent, 62 per cent, and several at about 50 per cent.

Those segments, below the line of existence where they could be considered purchasers of commodities advertised in the newspapers, tell the story of unequal distribution of this world's goods. Relief cases are only a part of it. Los Angeles, at least, lives 60 per cent as free, normal Americans as we generally think of them. Forty per cent barely exist.

That 40 per cent is the great problem of America. It is not local to Los Angeles. Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, speaking at San Diego a few nights ago, drove home that point. He said that in March, 1933, when business was 50 per cent of normal, 12,000,000 persons were out of work. We have moved back 50 per cent of the way to normal recovery and have re-employed 2,000,000 persons. Complete recovery would then theoretically employ 2,000,000 more, leaving a net of 8,000,000 without jobs. That is a theoretical slide-rule calculation but it, if not literally accurate, emphasizes the problem.

It is important to emphasize it because recovery is moving along so gaily now out here that it is easy to forget the indigestible mass inside the prosperity pie—a mass of unassimilated human beings that sooner or later is certain again to cause another attack of acute economic indigestion.

But, stomachache later or not, there are juicy morsels of plump business statistics to roll on the tongue at the moment. Here's one survey of 30 kinds of business in Los Angeles, as of July 1 last.

Question 1: Is your business more profitable than it was a year ago?

Answers: Yes, 60 per cent; no, 30 per cent; same, 5 per cent: did not say, 5 per cent.

Question 2: Do you employ more people now than a year ago? Answers: Yes, 51 per cent; no, 49 per cent.

Question 3: How do your collections compare with the same period last year? Answers: Better, 41 per cent; same, 49 per cent; case, 5 per cent; under, 5 per cent.

Question 4: Are you extending more credit now than you did a year ago? Answers: Yes, 28 per cent; same, 65 per cent; cash 7 per cent.

Question 5: What is the salary or wage trend in your business? Answer: Up, 48 per cent; same, 55 per cent.

Question 6: What in your opinion is the outlook for your business during the next year? Answers: Good, 40 per cent; better, 24 per cent; fair, 20 per cent; poor, 16 per cent.

That's fair enough. And there are some even more revealing facts which will have to be saved for a later dispatch.

It must have been someone from Los Angeles—they have such odd ideas out here about economics—who wrote in to the Treasury Department after seeing a news reel picture of worn-out paper money being destroyed at Washington:

"If you have all of that money to throw away," he wrote, "can't you distribute it to us poor people?"

Turn Back, Baldwin Begs Italy As Britain Spurs League Action

By the Associated Press.

London, Oct. 4.—Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin made a new appeal to Italy tonight and the British government pressed for a quick decision upon war guilt tomorrow at Geneva and the immediate discussion of sanctions.

Cheered by the French cabinet's firm support of Premier Laval and his backing for League action, authoritative quarters here expressed the hope the question of whether Italy is guilty or innocent of a violation of the League covenant will be decided by tomorrow night, paving the way for possible application of sanctions.

Speaking to the Conservative party convention at Bournemouth, Baldwin asked Italy "even at this hour" to refrain from action which would make the League's task more difficult.

Great Britain is throwing its full force behind the cabinet in an effort for decisive League action to insure the League's retention as an instrument of peace.

Official quarters in London believe a verdict for or against Italy will hinge on what actually happened at Aduwa and are hopeful the present confusion will be cleared up sufficiently by tomorrow to permit a determination of the real facts.

Authoritative British quarters, basing their conclusions upon developments, did not mince words in declaring Italy presented the world with "the flimsiest" of excuses for the reported air bombings.

Informed quarters expressed the view that unless Italy presents a better case than her allegation she was provoked and acted in self-defense, her brief would be swept into the waste basket and the table cleared for a sentence to be passed against the invaders.

Although the British government was without actual facts of the military situation at Aduwa, officials were visibly surprised by the Italian declarations there are Ethiopian forts in that sector. The British government has no information bearing out the presence of these forts.

Another point quickly raised in the minds of the British was the probability the Ethiopians were wholly within their rights in firing on Italian bombing planes flying over Ethiopian territory—if they did so.

Rules on Labor Relaxed to Aid Work Projects

Shortage of Skilled Men on Relief Creates New Job Problm.

contractors that there was a shortage of skilled relief help.

State WPA administrators were authorized to waive the 90 per cent requirement on PWA projects where certification is made that there are "no qualified workers on the public relief rolls available within the vicinity of the project."

New Regulations.

"Vicinity of the project" was defined as an area in which the worker may travel to and from the project without unusual cost or expenditure of time.

Where PWA workers are not taken from relief rolls, preference must be given first to bona fide residents of the political subdivision which is financing the project in part, and second to bona fide residents of the county in which the project is located.

Where contractors request union labor, either skilled or unskilled, employment agencies were directed to supply it from the membership of recognized unions, with the following preference: First, from regular union employes of the contractor who are on relief ;second, to other union members on relief rolls; and third, after exhaustion of union members on relief, to any other members of the union.

The stipulation was made that union labor must be made available within 4 8hours, Sundays and holidays excepted, or the jobs may be give nto other qualified workers.

Cites Drop in Relief.

Previously, Hopkins had given permissio nto use workers on union rolls, with preference to those on relief.

State WPA administrators, thrown on their own discretion in selection of approved projects, as one means of spending the program, meanwhile strove to find 593,441 jobs a week between now and November 1, in order to fulfill Administration pledges.

Hull Sets Rules For Licensing Of Arms in U.S.

Machines Created to Carry Out Munitions Clause of Neutrality Act.

ity act, although the former can be used to make the latter effective.

President Roosevelt is expected today or by Monday at the latest, to issue a proclamation declaring war has broken out between Italy and Ethiopia and warning all citizens that thereafter it will be unlawful, punishable by a fine not in excess of $10,000 or imprisonment not longer than five years, or both, to ship any of the arms, ammunition of implements of war" specified by him to either of the beligerents or to any neutral port for transhipment to or for the use of the beligerents.

Under the neutrality act passed by Congress the President has no discretion in this matter. It is mandatory on him to issue this proclamation as soon as the State Department determines beyond peradventure of doubt that a state of war, even though undeclared, exists between Italy and Ethiopia.

Although all the world seems to recognize that the Italo-Ethiopian war started Thursday, if not Tuesday, the State Department has taken the attitude that it cannot be rushed into making a decision and that before pronouncing the existence of a state of war it must have verified evidence that hostilities have started.

It is believed the State Department does not wish to pronounce the existence of an Italo-Ethiopian war in advance of such action by the League of Nations Council, which is dealing directly with the quarrel. The Council meets today and probably will render its verdict. Action by President Roosevelt is expected to follow shortly thereafter.

Little Doubt Now.

But while the State Department on Wednesday was chary in accepting reports of the Italian invasion of Ethiopia, there appeared yesterday to be no doubt in that quarter that hostilities actually had begun. This was evidenced by the issuance by the department of a statement describing dispatches from the American Charge d'Affaires at Addis Ababa, Cornelius Van H. Engert, asserting that "general mobilization was proclaimed on October 3" and that "hostilities were reported to have begun on the Eritrean border."

In addition the department received all communiques issued by the Italian government in Rome, several of which confirmed reports of the dispatch of Italian troops into Ethiopia and of fighting. The Rome embassy, as well as the American envoys in Geneva, Paris and London, is keeping the department apprised of every development and of every statement issued. This information in turn is being sent by radio immediately to President Roosevelt aboard the cruiser Houston, in the Pacific.

feared Aduwa would not be able to hold out for long. Defenders of Aduwa, which was bombed for a second time, shot down an Italian plane, an Ethiopian report said.

John Robinson, American aviator from Chicago flying for Ethiopia, fought o fftwo tIalian planes and took dispatches to the government from the front, the Exchange Telegraph Agency said.

Robinson, who was flying an antiquated monoplane, reported he ha dretutrned machine gun fire from the tIalian planes and escaped.

12,000 Natives Advance.

While Aduwa was resisting, an Ethiopian force of 12,000 men was reported to be advancing north toward Agordat. Skirmishes around Mussali were reported.

The pamphlets from the sky told Ethiopians "You have eyes but do not see. You have ears but do not hear. The Addis Ababa government, in preventing your trade with Eritrea, deprives you of a livelihood. During the bad days the Italians helped you. If today you make war, they will close their frontiers and you will be reduced to destruction by hunger and illness.

"Nobody except Italians can minister to your happiness or save you. Have confidence in Italy. Fear nothing. The Italians are powerful in army and in science and they are beloved of God."

Hundreds Face Isolation.

(An exchange telegraph dispatch from Addis Ababa said the last train from Addis Ababa for Djibouti, French Somaliland, will leave October 8 because of the Italian advance. This would maroon hundreds of foreigners, including Americans, as it is the only rail exit from the country.)

its base after completing the operations without a casualty."

Rains May Prove Boon.

As the frontier bristled with the advancing Fascisti, Italians claimed the torrential Ethiopian rains, just ending, might prove a boon as well as a hindrance to military transport.

They turned roads into a quagmire and made torrents of placid streams, but they filled water holes to the brim.

Gen. Emilio de Bono, war lord of the colonial forces, proclaimed the Italian advance to all tribesmen of the frontier Mareb River sector. He warned them to proceed tranquilly about their affairs and threatened: "Woe to all those who diffuse false notices or disturb public order!"

Poised on the escarpment over Aduwa, the Italian cavalry was in a strategic military position—able to swarm down on the Aduwa defenses at the first favorable moment.

Italians Voice Glee.

Throughout the Italian command there was great satisfaction with the precision with which the advance had been accomplished. The Blackshirt officers were especially proud of the fact it moved over the same terrain Italy relinquished in 1896, after 8,000 Italians had been killed and wounded and 3,000 imprisoned in the rout of Aduwa.

This was the first time in 39 years an Italian army had crossed the Mareb. Other localities already considered "regained for Italy," they said, were Abba and Carima, a few miles southwest of Aduwa, and the villages of Macalle, Adigrat and Alagi, also in the Tigre region. In this territory the Ethiopian native population has gained its livelihood from an area once and a half again as large as Switzerland.

Veteran Commands Advance.

A 58-year-old desert and mountain fighter, General Alessandro Pirzio-Biroli, commanded the advance column of Eritrean cavalry, said military reports to this headquarters.

He was chosen by Il Duce as one of the "big six" generals in east Africa. Schooled in the ways of native fighters in Libyan campaigns, Pirzio-Biroli was charged with seeing that the Eritrean-born troopers upheld the best traditions of Italian arms.

Behind these native horsemen and the tank corps in the big push were great concentrations of Italian infantrymen and field artillery units. Six divisions, with auxiliary troops, were reported involved in Italian operations in the Aduwa region.

Over this vast mass of men the scouting and bombing air squadrons, under command of Count Ciano, kept constant watch or rained death and terror from the sky.

Il Duce Moves To Keep Battle Out of Europe

Sends Aloisi Back to Geneva and Warns France on Hasty Sanctions.

dropped from airplanes told them they had nothing to fear unless they resisted.

Mussolini's Moves Listed

Mussolini's moves here, both economic and political, were as follows:

He signed a commercial accord with Spain, greatly increasing trade between the two countries.

(An Exchange telegraph dispatch from Istanbul, Turkey, said Italy signed a contract with a Black Sea company for large shipments of coal.)

He sent Baron Pompeo Aloisi, head of the Italian delegation, back to Geneva, where the Council of the League of Nations will meet tomorrow.

He allowed newspapers to warn France of the dangers of joining Great Britain in sanctions.

Aloisi Back In Geneva.

Aloisi returned to Geneva this afternoon. Mussolini, after the last cabinet meeting, promised to remain in the League until "it took full responsibility for measures striking at Italy." That implied, officials said, Italy would consider herself driven out by harsh sanctions if they are applied.

What Italy would do in the case of mild sanctions or a mere reproof, government circles did not say. Speeches and inspired editorials, however, show Italy's desire to remain in the League but without for an instant moderating the war with Ethiopia.

Government communiques and officials in conversation reported the military actions in marked moderation. No mention was made of casualty lists or any other war horrors. This was said in well-informed quarters to be in line with Mussolini's policy of seeking to quiet world opposition to the war.

Warning Given France.

An appeal to France to retain the recently restored Italian friendship was published by Il Lavoro Fascista. Along with it was a warning to France against "giving herself hand and foot to Britain," which "utilizes France's need of protection" on the German front. France was told if she follows Britain she will have to send "part of her forces to the Alpine front, now without garrisons."

A government effort to present the "justice" of the Italian cause and show the world Italy's moderation was exemplified by official news and proclamations of Gen. Emilio de Bono, commander of the combined Italian armies in Africa.

Natives back of the line were assured by De Bono that the war was to protect their interests and that they had no need to suffer. He warned them also against "false rumors that our enemies seek to spread against us."

State Blames Park Service For Eviction

Filling Station Operator Had Refused to Obtain Permit Is Claim.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Oct. 4.—The State was acting at the request of the National Park Service in evicting Melancthon Cliser from his home in Shenandoah National Park, Wilbur C. Hall, chairman of the State conservation and development commission, said today.

The actual ousting of Cliser from his property yesterday came after he had refused to obtain a required permit to operate a filling station in the park. Hall stated that an offer of the State to grant this permit was made against the recommendations of the park service, but was done in "maintaining a policy of the commission of co-operating in every possible way with the families in the park area which was taken over by the State."

Hall declared that no orders had been received to evict non-commercial residents of the park, while some persons in business within the park boundaries have been permitted to remain under an agreement that they cease their enterprises upon a 3-day notice.

A condemnation price of $4,855 was set on Ciser's 46 acres, but he refused to take it. His property remained on the roadside last night, where it was placed after he had been forced to listen to the reading of an eviction order, according to reports from Luray.

The State has been requested to evict two other operators of business establishments in the park area, Hall said.

Hikers to Visit Civil War Fort And Oxon Hill

Caverns Under Fort Stanton Added Attraction for Wanderbirds.

By Robert Shosteck.

Hikers who recall last winter's trip through the Oxon Hills and along Barnaby Branch will look forward to Sunday's Wanderbird trip through this scenic area, this time by a slightly different route, starting from Blue Plains. An added attraction on this trip will be the visit to the underground caverns of Fort Stanton, where munitions were stored during the Civil War.

Club members and readers of The Washington Post planning to go on this 7-mile trip will meet in front of The Post Building at 10 a. m., boarding buses which will take the group to the Home for the Aged at Blue Plains, the starting point of the hike. Reservations should be made in advance at National 4200. The round-trip fare will be 50 cents. Bring lunch and a cup for water.

Climb Wooded Trail.

The group will proceed downhill from the reservation, passing a truck farm and following a dirt road to a footbridge over Oxon Run. By trail and woodland road we ascend Oxon Hill to the small community at the crossroads of the same name. The 200-foot climb is made in about one mile of walking.

Oxon Hill derives its name from Oxford, England, and it is an abbreviation of Oxonia, a Middle Latin name for Oxford. The region was so named by an early settler from Oxford who allotted a large tract of land in this valley.

We stop for refreshments at Oxon Hill and then turn down an old woods road which leads gently downhill to Bemini road. We continue along the woods road, crossing Wheeler road and then following Barnaby Branch to a dirt road crossing about one mile up. Hikers will recall this part of the hike as the habitat of skunk cabbage and poison sumac. The former blossoms while the snow is still on the ground and the sumac, very scarce about Washington, may again be seen, this time in seed.

Extensive Caverns.

As shown on the accompanying map, the group will follow the north fork of Barnaby Branch as far as a dirt road which leads into Silver Hill. From here the buses will carry the hikers to the intersection of Alabama avenue and Walker road, at the top of Good Hope hill. This is but ¼ mile from Fort Stanton, which the group will now visit. It is advisable to bring along flashlights, since the caverns are extensive and, of course, unlighted. Dr. Stokes will lead.

* * * *

Next Sunday's mountain trip to Orkney Springs will include an 8-mile hike on Sunday and a short evening trip and camp fire party up Shrinemont. The group will leave at 2 p. m. Saturday and return late Sunday, with a stopover at Panorama. The total expense will be $5 and includes bus fare, guide service, overnight hotel accommodations and three square meals. Reservations close next Friday afternoon, and a deposit of $1 must accompany each seat reserved.

On the Air Today

THE ability to produce creditable "local programs" went into a distinct state of upturn this week. Those Gunther folks were so well pleased with "Judging the Stars" that they came back for more.

WRC planned to present for approval two prospective quarter-hour programs of different types and built two shows accordingly. When the audition came off the Gunther people couldn't decide which was the better—so they took both.

This is the first time, so I am told, that a local sponsor has presented two series of programs simultaneously from one station.

* * * *

The new Gunther shows will begin October 23. The first, titled "Velvet Voices," will be heard Wednesday nights. A really remarkable array of talent is employed for this quarter-hour; Marjorie King, soprano; Evangeline Tully, second soprano, and Virginia Sims, alto; Paul Fox's quartet, Uptowners Male Trio and instrumental interpretations by Melville and Fran.

The second show, "Uncle Zip," will be presented Friday nights, starring John Shelley—a musical show built around "Uncle Zip's" general store and postoffice at Happy Days Crossroads.

* * * *

Rumors, whether well-founded or not, have been current recently on the dissatisfaction of Chevrolet in the "G-Men" series. Obviously the sponsor wishes to sell automobiles in connection with the broadcasts and the source of material—the Bureau of Investigation—has not been so keen about its material being used in a commercially-sponsored half-hour, so 'tis said.

Announcement now comes that Chevrolet will produce a new musical show beginning October 19. This may or may not have anything to do, however, with a re-signing of the "G-Men" series. The new show will be built around Rubinoff and his violin, a 35-piece orchestra, Virginia Rae, popular soprano; Jan Peerce, tenor, and Graham McNamee. Its the first starring role for Rubinoff.

* * * *

A new form of Hollywood preview with a Nation-wide audience, not a handful of local celebrities, has been arranged for the Shakespearean spectacle "A Midsummer's Night Dream" tonight at midnight, WRC. Among the screen stars to be presented are James Cagney, Dick Powell, Hugh Herbert, Frank McHugh, Verree Teasdale and Olivia de Haviland. There'll be some behind-the-scenes events which led to making the picture.

* * * *

Things you may not want to miss: Thornton Fisher interviews Football Coaches Lou Little, Elmer Layden, Frank Thomas and others in his new series. The first is Lou Little, set for tonight, WRC, at 7 . . . Herbert Hoover in one of his infrequent mike appearances, addressing the Young Republican Assembly of California, WRC, at 10:30 . . . "Chateau" presents Eleanor Powell, Milton Berle, Niela Goodelle, Joe Humphries, Frim Sisters, Louis Armstrong and Walter Winchell at 9:30, WRC . . . Nino Martini introduces three songs from his new picture, "Here's to Romance," in his debut with the Chesterfield Orchestra, WJSV, at 9.

Plea for Utley Cites Boyhood Injury to Head

Nice Hears Arguments for Clemency in Holdup Slaying.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 4.—An array of witnesses paraded today before Gov. Harry W. Nice to tell him that Morris Utley, condemned to death for a murder during a holdup, had been moody and "peculiar" since a boyhood injury to his head.

The occasion was Gov. Nice's hearing on an appeal for clemency. A motion for a new trial was taken to the Court of Appeals, which divided evenly on the question, which, under Maryland law, sustained the decision of the lower court.

Nice Weighs Appeal.

After hearing the testimony, Gov. Nice took the appeal under advisement. Utley was convicted of shooting to death Charles T. Schimunek, a salesman, during a grocery holdup here last February. After Schimunek's death, Utley was arrested at Lancaster, Pa.

Among the witnesses was Utley's wife, who sat through the hearing with one of her two children on her lap. She told the Governor her husband had made three suicide attempts. Dressed quietly in black, her lips quivered as she told Governor Nice she had noticed before her marriage that Utley behaved queerly at times.

Prisoner's Father Testifies.

"But when you're young," she said, smiling a little, "you don't notice those things."

Another witness marshalled by R. Palmer Ingram, chief defense counsel, was Lemuel D. Utley, of Richmond, 74-year-old father of the condemned man. He told of Morris' fall from a bicycle and his constant headaches after the head injury.

In presenting his case to Governor Nice, Ingram stressed the evidences of insanity. J. Bernard Wells, State's attorney, countered by saying that the court had not considered this evidence and that the Governor, therefore, should not.

'Unreality' Chosen For Lesson-Sermon

Christian Science Subject Is Announced.

"Unreality" is the subject of the lesson-sermon in all the Churches of Christ, Scientist tomorrow. The golden text is from Jeremiah 23:28: "What is the chaff to the wheat? Saith the Lord."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." (Daniel 12:3).

The lesson-sermon also includes the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health With Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Angels. God's thoughts passing to man; spiritual intuitions, pure and perfect; the inspiration of goodness, purity, and immortality, counteracting all evil, sensuality and mortality." (Page 581).

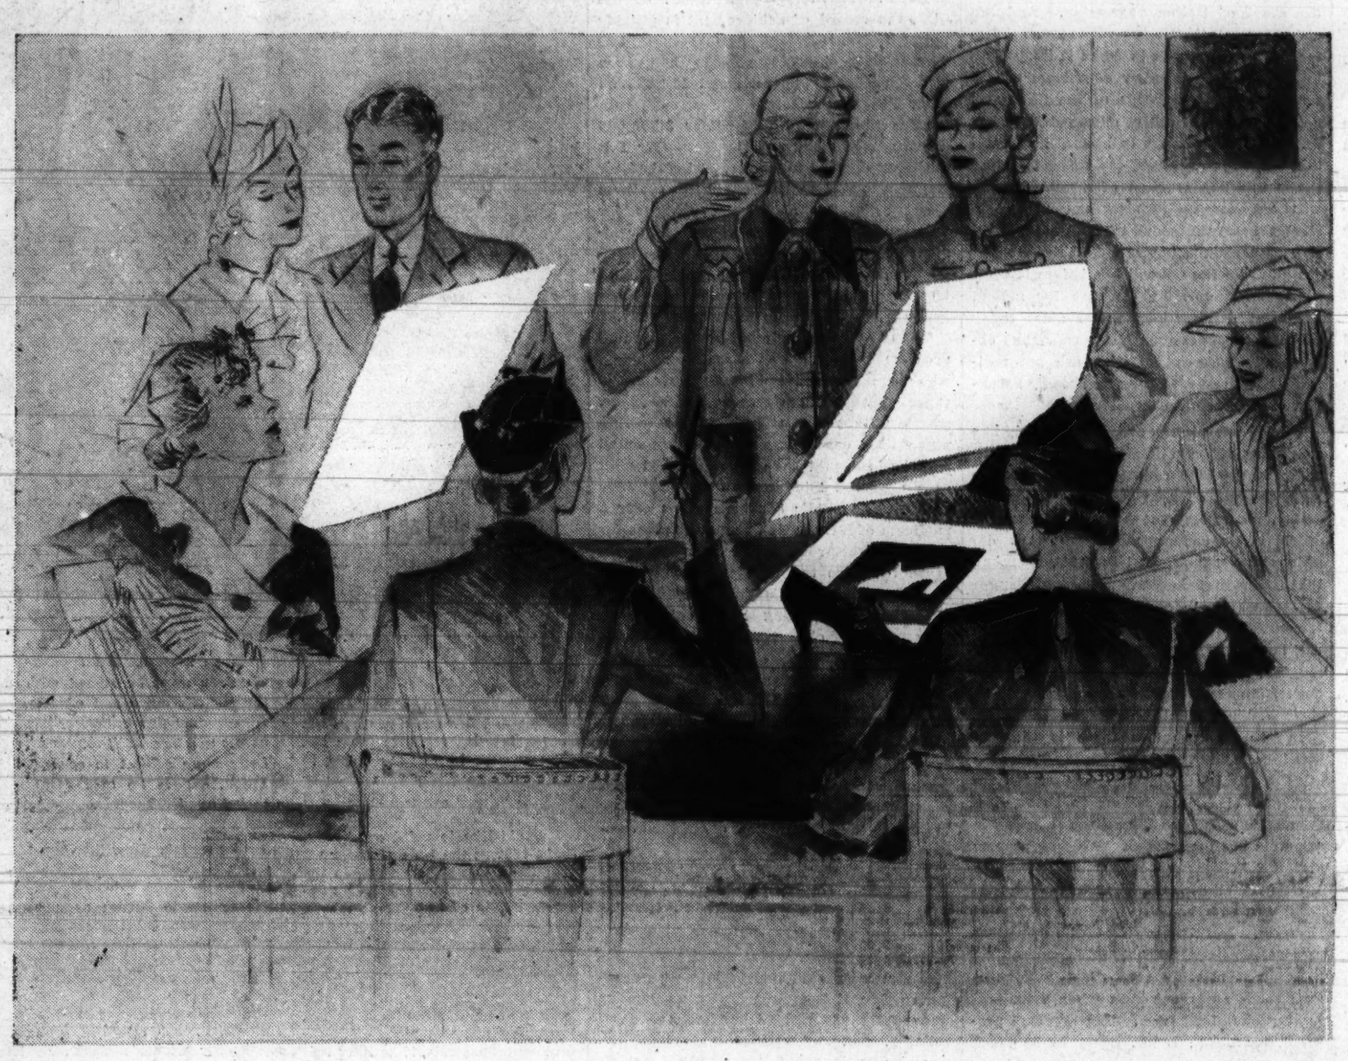
Charge Is Dismissed Against Palace Laundry

Charges that the Palace Laundry violated the female eight-hour labor law by employing four women beyond the prescribed hours, were dismissed by Judge Walter J. Casey in Polic Court yesterday.

The laundry company was represented by John C. Chevalier, manager. Judge Casey upheld contentions of Defense Attorney Milton King that Health Department inspectors assigned to check employes arriving for and leaving work, were not in a position to determine whether or not the four women named were actually working the entire time they were inside the building.

Fashions in Shoes . . .



Every year there occurs in New York a most significant huddle. It is the annual get-together of the country's outstanding shoe designers and stylists. For months previous to this meeting they have been haunting the style centers of the world wherever fashions are created, and in many out-of-the-way corners where fashion does not count but inspiration abounds. From couturiers' salons, to forgotten and romantic villages in the back country of Europe, sketches have been made, copious notes have been written, and new and enchanting shoe styles have been born. It is a momentous occasion, this esoteric gathering to compare notes and decide how the fashionable lady will dress her feet for the coming season. Outright dictators, that is what they are, with an absolutism excusable only because of their insatiable ambition to make lovely ladies more lovely. And out of these deliberations come the handful of accepted and approved designs to be made up and displayed before the shoe buyers of the country.

Equally significant is the part that the house of Garside, makers of fashionable footwear for more than seventy-five years, plays in this important event. Theirs has been, and remains today, an unexcelled reputation in the trade for producing the finest feminine fashion shoes. Fundamentally fine in workmanship and materials, exquisite in style . . . never bizarre, but always true smartness safely within the bounds of good taste. The Garside factory consists of a veritable family of craftsmen, many of whom have been born to the trade of making fine feminine footwear.

Not only do Garside designers sit in the inner circle where styles are made and shoe fashions are born, but time and again the stylists' conference turns to Garside to perform the delicate and important task of reproducing their creations for presentation to the buyers' meeting. Blended with this authenticity of style is a fineness in manufacture that has earned for them the high place they hold today.

It is most natural that Garside was chosen as the fashion footwear for the customers of Woodward & Lothrop, for Woodward & Lothrop are the exclusive carriers of these custom-crafted shoes in Washington. It is a logical consequence of the traditionally high standards of the two houses. Here you will find a very complete array of Garside shoes—sophisticated evening slippers, tailored pumps, modish street oxfords, all in lasts and sizes to fit the most exacting foot.

A Sham Neutrality.

Senator Nye urges the country to shun "the temptation to cash in commercially on the blood of other nations." When profits jeopardize our position as a neutral, he says, we must make up our minds to abandon them. The Senator evidently has a very inadequate conception of what constitutes the profits of war. He expects to preserve neutrality merely by withholding loans and credits from nations engaged in war, forbidding the use of American ships in delivering contraband to belligerents, and providing for mandatory enforcement of embargoes against the sale of munitions.

Not one of these policies, nor all of them together, would take the profits out of war, and they provide no guarantee whatever against our becoming involved in a major conflict. The profits of a war are almost impossible to trace down and isolate. They may be obtained, moreover, without doing business directly with nations at war, and they are quite as likely to precede as to follow the outbreak of hostilities. The United States, for instance, has already profited to a considerable extent from Italian purchases of our cotton, copper and other raw materials in preparation for war. We have already cashed in on our share of the bombs which blasted Aduwa.

Great Britain, in recent months has outstripped Italy as a buyer of munitions materials from this country and Japanese purchases of potential contraband have exceeded those of Britain. Of course, the cotton, copper, iron and steel which we sell to Italy, Japan, Great Britain and other countries may be devoted to peaceful purpose as well as warlike use. Nevertheless, the marked increases in shipments of such commodities to countries arming for war, or fearing war, yield profits that enable us to cash in "on the blood of other nations" without even being conscious of our participation.

If Senator Nye ever cared to delve beneath the surface, he would discover that the only sure way to take the profits out of war for a modern trading nation lies in a complete withdrawal from the field of foreign trade. A neutrality policy which is based upon mere abstention of trading with actual belligerents would not prevent our ships from being searched on the high seas or protect us from justifiable charges of being war profiteers.

Science Moves Forward.

There should be no disappointment if experience reveals exaggeration in the announcement that Dr. E. C. Rosenow, of the Mayo Foundation, has discovered a definitely effective serum for poliomyelitis. Universal desire fathers universal faith. But "cures" have been announced before—without verification—and it is to be noted that, as the true scientist should, Dr. Rosenow speaks guardedly of his serum. He emphasizes, for instance, that its value is contingent upon utilization at the onset of the disease.

Nevertheless, the news of the demonstration made with rabbits before the Kentucky State Medical Association does furnish ground for hope. Dr. Rosenow is not merely a bacteriologist with the Mayo Foundation, which bears an excellent name for painstaking achievement. He is also one of the pioneer students of this particular disease and is credited with having first, 19 years ago, isolated the germ which is believed to be its cause.

After each epidemic of a serious ailment, medical science tends to move at least one step toward successful treatment. It may well be that, this time, the control of this particular scourge is at last in sight.

The District Jail.

With billions of dollars being strewn about the country in the name of public improvements and with millions earmarked for the District alone, the superintendent of the District jail finds it necessary to map a campaign to win support for his plans to modernize the institution. In the midst of a bedlam of bookbinding, landscaping and leaf raking, the District jail festers in its disrepair. Such are the fruits of work-relief.

To further his cause, Superintendent Rives shows Lorton Reformatory to be a model penal institution compared to the local jail. Anyone who has ever inspected the District workhouse needs no further argument. The local jail, product of the engineering genius of 1876, is so outdated that electrocutions must be performed in the dining hall. Breakfast comes first, then an electrocution at 10 o'clock, and dinner at noon. Designed to accommodate 500 prisoners, the institution now houses 675. More guards are needed. Cells are difficult to heat, and the ventilation system is inadequate.

Before further talk is heard of another bridge, a subway system or a new parkway, attention should be given to Mr. Rives' plea for a reasonable modernization of the District jail facilities.

The Spotlight On Geneva.

While bombing planes blast paths for the onward march of the Italian invaders, the spotlight of fundamental interest shifts today from the field of warfare to the famous council chamber at Geneva. There the executive organ of the League of Nations is now confronted with both the overt act and the acid test. Mussolini has called for a showdown, and the League must place its cards, where all can see their quality, upon the green baize of the Council table.

Certain advantages, lacking in the Manchurian dispute, are to be found in the hands of Geneva. Most of the important League members have already committed themselves to the exercise of sanctions in the event of Italian aggression. And the character of that aggression is so barefaced, so flagrant, as to make it impossible to find even the shadow of a legal excuse for the current violation of the Covenant, not to mention other outraged treaties. Probably never before in history has a nation seriously advanced the present Italian thesis that the creation of a neutral zone was "in reality nothing more than a strategic move intended to facilitate aggressive preparations."

But while the Council has before it what seems an unquestionable case for action, the vital deliberations which start today will not be understood if the enormous obstacles to clear-cut decision are not realized at full value. They are, broadly speaking, of a threefold character.

Of real importance, even though Italy has so clearly indicted herself, is the impediment which that country—still a League member—can offer to any definite Council action. To preserve the full sovereignty of League members most important decisions at Geneva must be unanimous. And that means that there are a hundred ways—as Japan showed four years ago—in which Baron Aloisi, the shrewd Italian delegate, will be able to block and delay decisions by the Council. During those delays, of course, the Italian armies will be steadily smashing their way deeper into the heart of Ethiopia.

In the second place there is the tremendous difficulty of reaching agreement—aside from Italian obstruction—on the nature and kind of sanctions to be applied, even after a decision for collective action in principle has been taken. We may assume that the British would like to apply fairly drastic sanctions, the Russians moderate penalities, and the French only a very mild program. But the problem of reconciling these viewpoints, with all decisions subject to approval by the respective capitals, is seen to be enormous even when visualized in very simplified form. The eventual program, obviously, is not likely to be much stronger than the maximum acceptable to the most hesitant of the League leaders.

Last, but not least, is the problem for Geneva of the American attitude. When a community has a vital decision to take it is not greatly helped by the attitude of an important resident who, from a distant fishing hole, sends a message to the effect that he won't commit himself but would like everyone to believe him a "good neighbor." The exasperating factor for Geneva is that the United States has in no way officially indicated how it would regard any punitive League action against Italy. And, of course, that uncertainty greatly strengthens the arguments against taking any such action.

All in all, it can scarcely be expected that the League Council will act either very quickly, or very firmly. And, of course, it is on this that Mussolini counts. If he can utterly shatter the primitive Ethiopian defense before the incomplete and poorly geared machinery at Geneva becomes operative, the first rubber will have gone in his favor.

Noblesse Oblige.

In several recent ship mishaps, the captains have carried out the popular tradition of remaining on their vessels to the last. Their heroism is no less real because of the fact that once a ship is completely deserted it becomes a salvage prize for anybody. The monetary value of a ship and cargo, as well as a beautiful tradition, as old as ships themselves, combine to defer abandonment to the last possible moment.

But more than maritime tradition is involved. Shipwrecks involving the Morro Castle, the Dixie, the Rotterdam and others, and the resultant rigid investigations, remind anew of the written and unwritten marine laws which hold the captain of a vessel personally responsible for accidents, no matter what the direct causes.

It is one of those stern rules of the sea that ship masters may guide their vessels safely for a score of years, only to lose their commands through a single error of judgment. Where a rigid inquiry proves that factors of nature or acts of subordinates beyond normal expectations, out of his control, caused the accident, a captain may escape punishment. But public censure often remains; the responsible officer of a ship never has the same prestige among his fellows after a blunder. The caution, zeal and rectitude of a lifetime are forgotten. The doctrine of noblesse oblige—that rank confers obligation—is paramount on the sea.

Every person in a responsible place is in similar status. The minister may give years of consecration to his work, and be blacklisted for a single slip. The doctor may save a thousand lives, yet suspicion in one death will ruin him. The locomotive engineer, the public official, the teacher, the judge, the editor—all persons who depend on public confidence are daily reminded by examples that the head raised above the crowd is the target for stones in time of trouble; that one who assumes a rank above his fellows must, ipso facto, bear the full responsibility of that rank.

Whatever injustice, ingratitude and fickleness all these may betoken, the principle itself is sound. Constant vigilance is the price of prestige. Punishment is far more certain than reward. A fall is as swift as a climb is laborious. It is best so, for elasticity here would flood the world with excuses. Man instinctively is too prone to explain away his failures. Results are what count, and reasons for adult failure seldom fall on receptive ears.

Confession Of Failure.

With all funds allotted, State WPA directors report that 1,126,234 jobs have so far been provided under the work-relief program. Excluding enlargement of the CCC, the record of achievement is pitiably unimpressive. At the beginning of this month only 452,739 persons had been placed on WPA pay rolls and 113,855 on other Federal projects.

Thus the attempt to transfer 3,500,000 persons from relief rolls by November 1 is obviously doomed to failure. Administrator Hopkins is said to be planning to continue direct relief for able-bodied persons for whom no jobs have been discovered or invented by that time. This is substantiated by the decision to drop the provision that 90 per cent of the labor on certain PWA projects must be taken from relief rolls.

The collapse of the ambitious work-relief program is in no way surprising. Those who have followed its history have never expected anything else. It is, however, amazing that an undertaking involving peace time expenditures of unprecedented magnitude should have been launched with such apparent blindness to the difficulties ahead. The public has been given only a modicum of information regarding plans for utilizing work-relief funds, probably because they are too nebulous and too uncoordinated for publication.

Haphazard spending is unavoidable in view of the objectives sought by Mr. Hopkins. For instance, Assistant WPA Administrator Gill emphasizes the necessity of selecting projects that give employment to so many plumbers, carpenters or white collar workers, in order to remove them from local relief rolls. In other words, the work has to be devised to fit the men. Consequently, it can not be planned primarily to meet the requirements of the communities.

Examination of lists of WPA projects approved for certain States shows a preponderance of road construction plans and undertakings entailing limited overhead costs for materials. Since the aim is to provide a maximum number of jobs with minimum delay, it is certain that a good many unneeded roads will be built with Federal relief money, and various other local improvements launched that do not satisfy any pressing want or fit into any long-range planning.

Apart from the inadequacies of the work-relief program as a means of providing useful employment, it seriously interferes with systematic co-operation between Federal and State authorities in financing road construction and other improvements. Although local governments are said to have contributed $200,000,000 to the amounts that will be spent by the WPA for various purposes, there is no indication that these supplementary outlays will be applied in accordance with a predetermined arrangement for matching contributions. It is not merely that haste has made almost criminal waste. It is also causing structural injuries to the Federal system of government.

Man is that miserable creature who spends the greater part of his energies trying to win the admiration of others in an effort to compensate for his poor opinion of himself.

A ukulele is a so-called musical instrument which anybody can play and nobody can spell. (That is, nobody but proofreaders.)

There is implanted in each person the innate ability to act the fool. It isn't necessary for any of us to rehearse in order to turn out a finished performance.

Times are getting better. Now and then you see a man go into a bank with his hat on his head instead of in his hand.

The way people are backsliding these days we doubt if the road to hell is paved. It's probably oiled.

Petty Politics In The Dam's Name.

From the Kansas City Star.

Secretary Ickes' explanation of the change of the name of the Hoover Dam to Boulder Dam is one of those explanations that do not explain. Such a project, he says, is too important to carry the name of any living man.

But it happens that this principle seems to have been discovered for this particular occasion. The great Roosevelt Dam in Arizona, which was started in 1905 under the Administration of Theodore Roosevelt, was fittingly named for the President. The Wilson Dam in the Muscle Shoals project was named for Woodrow Wilson, while he was living. The Norris Dam was named for Senator Norris, and the Wheeler Dam for Senator Wheeler.

Herbert Hoover, as Secretary of Commerce, was chairman of the Colorado River Commission that finally obtained the seven-State compact that made possible the construction of the dam in the Colorado River, and the dam appropriately was named for him.

In view of this record the country can come to only one conclusion about the change in the name of Hoover Dam. It was intended as a slap at the former President and was politics at its pettiest.

A Mind Fed By Tabloids.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your very interesting correspondent, Jonathan Swift, writes on the modern fad for proletarian novels and proletarian art. He takes Mr. Schriftgiesser to task for "going to bat" for those artists who write or paint in what is called a proletarian angle.

I would like to point out to Mr. Swift that at the time of the Civil War there was such a thing in the air as slavery. The subject was uppermost in most intelligent minds. Had Mr. Swift lived in those days and read "Uncle Tom's Cabin," he would have no doubt dubbed it just a fad novel about slavery. However, "Uncle Tom's Cabin" has outlived the Jonathan Swifts of its day. It was an effective piece of literature, or propaganda, if he likes that word better.

If Mr. Swift thinks that proletarian art is a racket, he merely shows in what track his mind runs. His mind has been fed by the tabloids and the word racket slides glibly from his pen. It is so easy to write racket, and its connotation is immediately implied. The average reader shrugs his shoulder and says "So what?" But a more serious thinker would take proletarian art as an honest manifestation of the times we live in. It seems that Mr. Swift never lived through the recent depression, with its tremendous unrest. However, his eyes were interested in the more lurid news of the day, Capone and Dillinger. Racket, therefore, is a word more significant to Mr. Swift than the five-year depression. How then can Mr. Swift understand the times and be equipped to judge proletarian art?

He points to Rivera as a good showman, who knows his publicity. But in venerating Shelly, Byron and Heine he does not mention that they in their own days did a few stunts for newspaper space, not planned, but nevertheless spectacular enough for widespread comment. Shelly fought for women's rights, Byron was a good swimmer, Heine was through a revolution, etc. Mr. Swift should not condemn an artist who finds himself in print and then class all proletarian art as a fad. Mr. Swift, there is something in the air. Do you smell it or is your nose buried deep in the folios of the past?

Yours for honest art criticism.

On Judges' Vacations.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your recent editorial on the three-month vacations of the judges of our higher local courts was very timely and to the point. I am very sure that it awakened a warm response in the hearts of many whose cases are awaiting trial, while they are imprisoned—although presumed innocent by law—because they lack money for bail and, also, among many whose cases have slowly crept forward on calendars in our local Supreme Court, always six months behind!

The President does not absent himself from his job for the three entire summer months; nor do his Cabinet officers. But our judges suspend all progress toward trial of cases on their calendars; permit persons later proved innocent to remain imprisoned three months longer; litigants and witnesses even die, at times, because trial dates are advanced three months further in order that they may vacation for three months, which halts the entire machinery of our courts, in so far as trials are concerned. Injustice results which is avoidable.

Our Constitution provides orderly pathways to exact and equal justice for all citizens and I am wondering if one's constitutional rights are not infringed when judges arbitrarily close our courts up, against trials, for one-fourth of the calendar year to vacation. MERE CITIZEN.

The Pedestrian Problem.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Without wishing to enter an endless controversy with Mr. Van Dusen relative to traffic in Washington, I nevertheless feel that some one should come to the defense of those men, women and little children who have been sent to their graves by the wild killers on wheels who are allowed to use the streets as race courses without fear of arrest. The traffic director states most of the killings are to be blamed upon the victims, and he quotes figures. What are figures worth if not based on facts? Does he expect one of these murderers to go into court and admit responsibility for a killing? Usually the driver is the only one who sees the accident and he knows the dead cannot challenge his lies. With no real information upon which to base a verdict the jury at the inquest clears the driver, and, "the figures show."

Mr. Van Dusen says the pedestrians will not protect themselves and must be made to do so. Protect themselves against what? Against the careful driver who respects the rights of others? No one needs protection from him. All, however, need protection from the insane bonehead who daily violates every traffic regulation that gets in his way whether at the crosswalk or in the midle of the street or block. Does Mr. Van Dusen claim we are getting this protection? Can he walk two blocks on a downtown street without seeing traffic violations by drivers who do not give a whoop in hades for the safety of others? Since when have the crosswalks been made safe for pedestrians.

The writer walks from 60 to 75 blocks every day and has a fairly good idea of what the pedestrian is up against in this town. When Mr. Van Dusen makes the crosswalks safe for use by the walkers, they will be glad to confine their crossings to those spaces, but they are sick and tired of his stereotyped tirades against the killed and wounded and the clearance he is continually giving the drivers. He knows no more about the traffic here than the average citizen.

Monuments On The Ellipse.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Though not a native of Washington, I have been a resident and property owner for many years and I love every foot of it. I want to express my appreciation of your recent editorial, "Save the Ellipse," and wish to say ditto to every word of it. J. D. S.
Washington, Sept. 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read, with a great deal of interest, your editorial under date of September 25, on "Save the Ellipse." I am fully and heartily in accord with the editorial.

I served for some four months with the Second Division in the camouflage section, and therefore have a feeling of sentiment for the desire of the Second Division to memorialize their dead. I do think, however, that a more proper place can be found than where now proposed. RALPH WALKER.
New York City, Oct. 3.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read your editorial of recent date and title, "Save The Ellipse." I am in entire agreement with your statements and conclusion. There should be other sites available for such a well deserved memorial as is proposed for the Second and Fourth Divisions without introducing such features in the majestic and beautiful tree studded Ellipse area. I hope that your protest will be effective in bringing about reconsideration of the site.

E. S. DRAPER.
Knoxville, Tenn., Oct. 1.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with great interest the editorial published in The Post under date of September 25. I have known Washington intimately for a number of years and I have followed with keen interest the development of this plan. In my personal opinion, it would be unfortunate to encroach upon this restful and natural park area with a monument such as is now proposed to commemorate the Second Division.

I am heartily in favor of an appropriate monument to commemorate this or any other division who so well served its country during the World War. I am equally heartily opposed to the placing of any such monument in any portion of the "Ellipse."

Those of us who must view any memorial should have an equal right with the donors of such a memorial, to an expression of an opinion concerning the appropriate location in which the public may best appreciate the purpose for which the monument is erected. As one of the members of the "public" and as an individual who has devoted many years to the study of such problems, I do hope that further serious consideration will be devoted to the question of selecting a proper site for this memorial before the decision to place this memorial on the "Ellipse" area is accepted as final.

A memorial, however successful its designer may be in producing a work of art, will lose much of its intrinsic value and will destroy a beautiful natural area if erected as now proposed in this setting.

In writing this comment, I do not wish to be placed in the position of unduly criticizing the judgment of those who have approved this site. All that I ask is that the fullest consideration be given to every possible part of this problem and that the intrinsic beauty and the simplicity of this natural area be given its due share of consideration before it is finally decided to encroach upon this area.

The Post Impressionist

Mystery of the Registered Bond.

Post Office, Saturday.

LAST night Williamson came to us in great puzzlement and distress. He said:

"There's something very queer going on in the Treasury Department. I feel that the Post-Impressionist ought to institute an investigation. I am convinced that there's gross carelessness in the Division of Loans and Currency and I have documentary evidence which at least seems to indicate collusion to cover the carelessness.

"My son was born toward the end of the World War," Williamson continued: "You know Tom. Well, along about then, the Government was issuing all sorts of bonds—Liberty Bonds and Victory Bonds. The Government said they would help win the war, or make the world safe for democracy, or soldify the peace; and the President and the Secretary of the Treasury appealed to everybody to buy the bonds as a patriotic duty and a good investment. Why, the Government advertised those bonds—sent sales agents all over the country to sell them! People were so worked up, you were liable to be lynched for treason if you didn't subscribe.

"So I bought one for Tom.

"Then the Government advised all buyers to have their bonds registered. It said: 'This guarantees your ownership in case the bonds are stolen or mislaid.'

"So I had Tom's bond registered.

"It was registered as belonging to him or me.

"The interest came in regularly: I'm bound to admit that. But a while ago, when the Government said it would redeem the bonds, and I couldn't find ours—well, I wasn't worried, because it had been registered. So I wrote to the Treasury Department—and that's how I got the first hint of the trouble I'm talking about.

* * *

"I wrote on August 21—gave the approximate date of purchase and the names of registration. And on August 28 I got an answer—I have it here."

Whereupon, Williamson produced a letter reading thus:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
Office of the Secretary,
Division of Loans
and Currency.
August 28, 1935.

Dear Sir:
In re Thomas G. Williamson or William Q. Williamson.
Receipt is acknowledged of your recent communication. This matter is receiving attention and you will be fully advised relative thereto as soon as possible.

M. WESLEY,
Chief.

Countersigned:
R. L. LINDSEY,
Manager, Claims Section.

"That sounded fair enough," said Williamson, "but, after a bit, 'as soon as possible' got to be pretty long. So, on September 4 I wrote again—and again, one week later I received this answer."

He produced another letter which read thus:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT.
Office of the Secretary.
Division of Loans
and Currency.
September 11, 1935.

Sir:
Receipt is acknowledged of your recent communication, September 4, 1935. This matter is receiving attention and you will be fully advised relative thereto as soon as possible.

Respectfully,
M. WESLEY,
Chief.

Countersigned:
R. L. LINDSEY,
Manager, Claims Section.

"Now," said Williamson, "no unprejudiced man will deny that, even apart from their strange English and punctuation, there is a certain similarity in those letters. And they are signed, you'll observe, by two persons: a joint action. Moreover, the salutation of the second letter casts serious doubt on the 'respectfully' of Mr. Wesley's signature: whereas I was first addressed as 'Dear Sir,' I was next greeted as 'Sir'—somebody was trying to scare me.

"Well, I wasn't to be scared. Every week since then, I've written a genuinely respectful letter to this Division of Loans and Currency. And—would you believe it?—every week, just a week after hearing from me, those people have replied that 'this matter is receiving attention' and told me that I 'will be advised relative thereto as soon as possible.'

* * *

"What's happened to the Treasury Department's registration-records?" asked Williamson suspiciously. "August 21st—till today! I'm patriotic; I'm a warm admirer of the present Administration; I'm willing to forget I paid gold dollars and will get—I hope—sixty-cent dollars back. But I bought a bond from the Government, and had that bond registered, on the Government's promise to redeem it—lost, strayed or stolen. Tom wants the money for his schooling. And I want the Government to keep its word. So we both want an investigation!"

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Chicago, October 4.

THE first Chicago game of the World Series was the most dashing display of baseball, the martial spirit and elegance, combined, that has ever been presented to the patrons of the industry. The polite charm of the spectacle was marred only by the petulance of two of the umpires, the Messrs. Moriarty and Quigley.

The baseball was spirited and full of the fascinating uncertainty which old Abner Doubleday wrote into his invention before the Civil War, the marching and tooting of the American Legion band were the stuff that wars are made of and the ushering was beautiful. Moreover, the contest took a turn in the last half of hie ninth inning which gave the public two extra measures of sport before the Cubs finally lost to the Tigers in the eleventh, 6 to 5.

And even Mr. Moriarty's rage at certain parties on the Cubs' bench, identity unknown, was expressed in language that could not bring a blush to the cheek of wife or maid for it is a famous fact that Mr. Moriarty does not commit his violence by word of mouth. When he wishes to resort to force he uses other measures. He will fight a whole bench load of tobacco-eating athletes 25 years younger than himself with his raw hands, and has done so with success. Or he will take them three at a time with ball bats. But he is notorious for his wholesomeness. He has committed poetry in his time, he lectures to the youth of the land in winter on the pleasures and rewards of clean listing and speaking and he has raised a son to be a surgeon.

IT is a good idea to have a surgeon in the Moriarty family, for a man who does not hesitate to challenge a whole ball club naturally suffers from wear and tear from time to time. Mr. Moriarty's temper rose in the eighth inning. A few minutes earlier he had called out Phil Cavaretta, the Cubs' first baseman, in a close play at second. The acoustics of the major-league ball parks are such, unfortunately, that the comments of the performers are lost to the patrons. Therefore they were unprepared when the umpire interrupted the pleasure to talk over to the Cubs' bench, a huge figure of authority and wrath, waving a mighty arm at the players sitting down the while and uttering remarks. There seemed to be a sharp difference of opinion down there and the dispute went on and on. Possibly he issued his standard invitation to them to come on out back of the structure and fight according to his old formula. But, if so, the party was postponed till later. For, after an impressive demonstration of the majesty of the law, Mr. Moriarty returned to his position to the tune of the boos of some 45,000 citizens, but disdained to challenge them en masse. He may be slipping.

Mr. Quigley's annoyance was briefer, just as gaudy. In the sixth inning, Pete Fox, of the Tigers, hit a triple to drive in Goose oGslin from first with their first run. A moment later Gabby Hartnett, catching for the Cubs, whipped a throw down to third and caught Fox, to the great chagrin of Del Baker, the coach, who was supposed to warn against such mishaps. Baker disagreed with Quigley's judgment and, one word leading to another, was ordered off the field and out of the park. Retiring to the bench, Baker took a drink, cleaned his cleats, tied his shoe and fell to gossiping.

Mr. Quigley, who used to be a professor of history at St. Mary's College, Kansas, waited more than a reasonable time for the boy to leave the room, glaring at him over his folded arms. Then, losing patience, the old professor stormed over to the dugout and stood there until Baker vanished.

"And don't come back," said he.

It was an important victory for authority in a time when farmers are like to haul a judge off his bench and make him walk in from the country without his pants merely for signing a foreclosure. But everything else about the World Series was so sweet and pretty and the conduct of the company so respectable that it seemed unfortunate for the umpires, of all people to pipe the only notes of strife.

How to Write Thriller

By William Lyon Phelps

I HAVE often wished there might be a convention held of all writers of murder stories and that I might be present as a looker-on.

Well, it seems they have something of the kind in England, as I learn from my friend Capt. William J. Walker, of Albany, who has been spending the summer there. He sends me an interesting article from a London newspaper describing a luncheon held at Grosvenor House, which was given over to what they call the Crime Club.

At this luncheon writers of detective stories met many policemen and detectives. It would have been more interesting had murderers been invited. I believe this was not done. But the novelists and the detectives seem to have had a very good time. Lady Townshend was in the chair.

• • • •

Mr. Freeman Wills Crofts, whose recent novel, "The Crime at Nornes," I find very ingenious, made a speech in which he said there were exactly four stages observed by most writers of detective stories: First, one must have a brilliant idea; second, one must build a plot around the idea, which was the most tedious part of the work; third, the rearrangement of incident, as the book begins with the discovery of the crime, and the author must work back to it; fourth, the actual writing of the book, where veiled clues must be put in to deceive the reader.

Then a critic of the London Observer, who signs himself Torquemada, gave out four warnings to writers: First, not to give their heroes too much courage or brains; second, not to make unlikely crimes appear more likely by disparaging the works of other authors; third, not to dwell on the consumption of beer by hearty detectives; fourth, not to introduce an unnecessary number of deaths of maiden aunts and other innocents.

• • • •

About two of these warnings I will say that, as all murder stories for me are in the realm of pure romance, the hero (Race Williams, for example) cannot have too much courage; and as it is pleasant to see brave men enjoy themselves, I don't mind their consuming gallons of beer, in the fashion of Nero Wolfe and Bulldog Drummond.

At this same luncheon, Mr. David Hume, author of "They Called Him Death," gave a number of expressions he had learned from the underworld, and Mr. John Rhode also spoke.

Among those present were Rose Macaulay, Leon M. Lion, Gilbert Frankau, P. G. Wodehouse, and those two masters of murder-story writing, Agatha Christie and Mr. J. Jefferson Farjeon, grandson of the actor Joseph Jefferson.

It was announced that the chief speaker at the next luncheon would be Rudyard Kipling.

As Paris Hears It

France Turns Italo-Ethiopian Conflict Into Fascist Debate; Boncour Probable Successor to Laval; Strain On Lira Means Italy Must Colonize With Men, Not Capital As With French.

By Andre Vulliet.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Paris.

IT is a curious thing, indeed, to see the way that the Italo-Abyssinian conflict is being turned, particularly in France, into a dispute between Fascists and anti-Fascists. Truly, many people regard it purely from the angle of their feeling toward the Italian regime and take sides according to whether they like it or not.

It seems the man in the street does not realize that a nation's interior policy is one thing and its foreign policy is another, and that the latter in the long run is not the result of preferences or ideals but rather of geographical positions and demographical needs. A large portion of France's public opinion on the matter is divided into right and left as it was after the bloody days of February 6, 1934 and the important anti-Fascist street parades of last July. The rightists, although they admit Il Duce has shown ill-timed cynicism and intransigence, think that there is something to his case and that a way should be found to avoid sanctions. The leftists put Fascism, dictatorship and reaction all in the same bag and would gladly help to push them overboard. What would happen in Italy and possibly Europe after the end of Mussolini they do not venture to say. But they would take it as a full proof that "Fascism could not end otherwise."

• • • •

PAUL BONCOUR, a former French Premier and Socialist and a prominent member of the French delegation at Geneva, is the politician who is regarded as the most likely choice to succeed the present French Prime Minister Pierre Laval should he be overthrown because of his Italophile attitude or his policy of economics. Incidentally it may be recalled that Mr. Paul Boncour is the man who, speaking at the Chamber of Deputies, a few years ago, publicly called Mussolini a "carnival Caesar."

• • • •

FROM the Eritrean frontier, on the borderline of Ethiopia, the exalted Italian youths now ready for war can see the mountains of Aduwa where young Italy some 40 years ago received a terrific blow from the Abyssinians. For years it was enough to make Italy doubt her destiny.

Today, Fascist Italy wants that Ethiopian empire for her emigrants, her workers, her traders. She wants it because it is the only stretch of land in Africa that can be populated, cultivated, exploited without grabbing it from some European "master." She wants it because she must have her revenge. But she also wants it because she has given up the hope of going to Tunisia (after the Franco-Italian agreement of last January), because she cannot expand into the Balkans, because she is barred from Asia Minor by the Turkish hostility, because more than 1,000,000 Italians have been repelled from other countries since the depression set in, because her population is increasing at the rate of 500,000 a year and her low standard of living is hard to maintain because she feels that if she waited too long for a colonial "New Deal" England might well give in to Germany first.

• • • •

THE question remains to be seen whether this very war which Signor Mussolini has undertaken with a view to giving Italy new resources and eventually a higher standard of living is not going to put such a strain on its civil population as to seriously lower its living standard.

Coal prices were recently raised overnight by 20 per cent to from $21 to $25 a ton, according to quality. Moreover, all purchases must be justified and made from the state railway only, which sounds pretty much like a real monopoly. Gasoline prices, which until a few months ago were around 60 cents a gallon, were suddenly raised to 70 cents, then to 92 cents six weeks ago, only to soar to $1.10 a gallon two weeks ago. This may be only a respite as those in the know tell you that gas is certain to skyrocket to around $1.50 before the end of October. There is no better way of preventing car owners from using their automobiles, leaving all the gasoline available for the army's and tourists' consumption.

As a matter of fact, for the past two weeks, great signs have been posted at every customs house on the roads to Italy, reading as follows: "Welcome to Italy! Buy petrol coupons, 40 to 80 per cent reductions." This is written in three languages, English, French and German. It means that such "petrol coupons" can be sold to foreign passenger cars entering Italy provided they also buy "hotel coupons" for a stay of from 8 to 15 days. Which also means that those beautiful roads, built with just pride by new Italy may before long be used only by army trucks and foreign cars.

• • • •

COFFEE, sugar, taxes are also going up. The lira is going down and, to refrain as much as possible from buying metals from abroad, Italian industrialists are rounding up all the scrap iron and copper they can find at home. Thrifty Italians can now dispose of whatever scrap iron they may have at 11 cents for every 20 pounds, while old copper sells at 10 cents a pound.

Sadly enough, it seems that Fascist Italy is starting out on the warpath with a financial and economic situation which is already putting its civil population to task. But while the civil population of any country can go almost to the starving point to resist a foreign invasion of its soil, its docility when it comes to a colonial campaign is far more questionable. The results must be quite rapid, the economic advantages thereof quite tangible, or the enthusiasm readily cools down. It is a well known fact, for instance, that the French colonial campaigns, and particularly the pacification of Morocco during and after the World War, had to be carried out with the least possible talk about them. No economic brunt was ever thrown upon the shoulders of the French people.

ONE essential fact about colonial wars is that you generally make them to "colonize." It may be of interest to note, for instance, that for the past 50 years France has "colonized" with the minimum of settlers. What she sent into her colonies was not so much "men" as "capital," which in the long run pleased the natives as they did not have to be kicked off their own land.

In the case of Italy, when she colonizes, she must do it with as many men and as little capital as possible. It looks like a safe bet to think that her settlers will eventually grab the best land and repel the natives on to the low-grade soil. It looks just as safe to say that "to colonize with men" is a source of perpetual trouble with the native population because, instead of bringing them fresh capital, you simply take their place from under the sun.

• • • •

"ITALY will go straight ahead," "Italy will accept no compromise," "The total of our military forces is such as to strike back at any menace wherever it comes from." Such are some of Mussolini's remarks delivered during the past month either publicly to Italian crowds or soldiers, or to innumerable newspapermen of all descriptions and nationalities. The trouble with talking, many think, is that it sometimes becomes hard to live up to one's speeches.

It seems Il Duce had bid the full value of his hand a month or so ago, during the Paris conference between French Premier Laval, Sir Anthony Eden and Baron Aloisi, when the British were ready to let him score a perilous but makable small slam. Whether he can now make a grand slam, doubled by Great Britain, is a big question mark.

Tammany's Despair.

New York, Oct. 4.

POLITICS, as Washington has unprecedented facilities for remarking, makes strange bedfellows. But when there aren't enough bed sheets to go round it makes mighty restless ones, too.

Tammany, here in New York, for more than two years, has been in the uncomfortable and unusual position of being out of power. As Tammany exists only for the production and propagation of power (and incidentals) this makes the going somewhat tough. Mayor LaGuardia conducts what he calls a strictly non-partisan administration which affords him an excellent opportunity to build up his own machine. Naturally, he doesn't give Tammany so much as a distant odor of patronage. Being strictly non-partisan, he doesn't give the Republicans any, either, but they have gotten so used to not having any in New York City that it really doesn't make much difference.

It makes a difference to Tammany, though. And the irritating part of it is that although there is a Democratic Administration in power at Washington they don't get any Federal patronage, either. Jim Farley sees to that and is quite frank about intimating that by 1937 there won't be any Tammany unless the braves consent to pick up chicken-feed out of his dispensing hand.

• • • •

TAMMANY doesn't see it just this way. It has a long memory and in national affairs has seen Democrats alternate with Republicans. But past history teaches it that once the Wigwam raises its tent pole in the City Hall the tepee is apt to remain up for 20 years or more. It takes the electorate here about that long to accumulate a really cleansing flood of disgust.

Nevertheless, it is distinctly embarrassing not to have any patronage. Nathan Hale on his way to the scaffold could take a long-range view of matters and say, with a certain exaltation of the spirit: "I regret that I have but one life to give to my country." It is rather difficult to look around at your constituents and get any uplift out of saying, "I regret that I have but one job to give to my district." In fact there isn't even a chuckle in it.

The result has been the worst series of primary contests Tammany has had to contend with since Jim Dooling was knee-high to a grasshopper. The boys have been simply snarling at each other and in every borough but the Bronx, where Flynn is all powerful, there have been bitter fights with charges enough to ram down the throat of a 16-inch gun. The results in general leave the leadership of the hall slightly lame but still functioning. And that lack of patronage is at the bottom of it all, is clearly enough indicated by the fact that Farley candidates won in Queens and Staten Island and that the insurgents almost ran away with the swag in Brooklyn. No doubt Mr. Dooling sighs and says it's temporary, but those lean years are hard for a well-fed machine to put up with.

• • • •

THE Republicans, too, went through all the motions of fighting among themselves. They may get a few, but their shadow boxing was more or less academic.

Watching these vigorous primary contests is a pleasure denied Washington where the atmosphere is surcharged with politics though, as far as the residents are concerned, largely by proxy. Up here, though, they are taken very seriously and for weeks in advance the papers are full of prognostication and protest. Then afterward, of course, all is written down as happy and harmonious. Only it isn't. It never is in politics until there are a few jobs to distribute among the panting patriots.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Sexton of St. Paul's.

("Paul Schaefer today celebrated his fiftieth year as sexton of St. Paul's Chapel, Broadway and Vesey street, in the heart of New York's financial section, and in which George Washington worshiped. For a half century he has tolled the chapel bell for all services."—News item.)

Like far-off music out of place
Where man fights man for gold,
The bells of St. Paul's Chapel through
The weary years have tolled.

Like bedlam are these narrow streets—
Dark corridors of trade—
But through them all the simple call
To faith each day is made.

Each morning at the break of day
Into the canyons drear
A lonely figure makes his way
To sound a call so clear.

He goes unnoticed through the streets,
Where men for power slave,
To dust the pews, to toll a bell,
To trim an ancient grave.

He shuffles through a hushed Broadway
And opens wide a gate,
But few men note his presence in
The trade mart of the great.

A little while and mighty men
Before whom cities bow
Will come by limousine and cab,
To dictate, but not now!

A little while and tumult high
Will rage as thousands plod
This street . . . but in this early hour
The street belongs to God!

A little while and cabs will shriek
And clamor split the air,
But now at dawn a sexton walks,
And Christ is with him there.

For fifty years this sexton's hands
Have at the break of day
Thrown open wide an ancient door
That weary men might pray.

The shriek of rivet piercing steel,
The whistle, bell and gong . . .
The ticker's insane clatter . . . Then
A Chapel belfry's song!

In buildings great of stone and steel,
Where men pile fortunes high
And thousands battle for success
There comes the question . . . "Why?"

A little house, the chapel stands
'Mid monuments to gold,
But in the citadels is heard
The message as of old.

Oh, mighty men, hold power here
And rule within these walls,
But who shall say they're greater than
The sexton of St. Paul's?

"Passing of Third Floor Back" to Be Given World Screen Premiere at Belasco

British Makers Will Introduce Film Over Here

England to Have It Later; 'Venus' Pittsburgh Hit; Theater Chatter.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," a film version of the play made famous on the stage by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, will be given its world premiere in the Belasco Theater in this city on Friday, October 25, according to statement made to this column yesterday by A. P. Waxman, national director of publicity for Gaumont British in America, during the course of a one-day visit to the Capital.

Mr. Waxman gives his assurance that "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," although produced by Gaumont British in London, will be publicly shown in Washington before it is presented in England or anywhere else in the world.

In the role created on the stage by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, and, by an odd coincidence, also presented for the first time locally in the Belasco Theater, Conrad Veidt has been cast.

Mr. Veidt is an actor of the first rank who is as well known in this country as he is abroad by reason of having fulfilled more than one contract engagement on the West Coast.

Adapted From Jerome's Play.

Adapted, of course, from the original work by Jerome K. Jerome, celebrated English humorist, author and playwright, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" has been directed by Berthold Viertel. Foremost in Mr. Veidt's support will be seen Renee Ray and Anna Lee.

Mr. Waxman, an old friend who graciously paid this desk a considerable visit yesterday afternoon, when this desk found it impossible to pay him one, is enthusiastic over the impending premiere and it was largely through his instrumentality that Washington and the Belasco Theater were selected to be honored by the occasion.

It is the purpose of its sponsors to make this important opening an event of social, official, diplomatic and professional significance. Plans to that end already are under way.

This, to the best of my recollection, will be the first world premiere that will have been celebrated at the Belasco since the famous old Schubert house was taken over by Matty Radin and his associates as an outlet for foreign-made films of artistic and cultural worth, as opposed to the purely commercial.

Although a trifle vague as to hour, Mr. Charles C. Gillman, director, 1736 G street northwest, wishes it known that the Triangle Club, a local acting group, is holding open tryouts for parts in "Little Women" in the assembly hall of the Y. M. C. A. today. There are still important assignments to be made to complete the cast of this imminent production of the club's. Here is one more chance for local aspirants to Thespic honors.

Venus Clicks!

One suspects, after having been bombarded with all manner of extravagantly commendatory clippings from Pittsburgh papers by that prince of avant couriers, Mr. Charles Washburn, that "Venus in Silk" is quite an operetta.

"Venus in Silk," you will recall, is the Laurence Schwab production that will inaugurate the season of living attractions at the National Theater next Monday night. It boasts a book by Mr. Schwab and Lester O'Keefe and score by Robert Stoltz. It also seems to boast a number of other qualities that write it down, at least in Pittsburgh, as one of the treats of the season.

It is not my intention to quote a complete review in this limited space—and, anyway, I'll have to compose one myself in three more days—but just to give you a rough idea, it seems no more than fair to set down verbatim a few of the impressions left upon the receptive mind of Mr. George Seibel, of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, by this gay work.

Mr. Seiber Salutes.

Says Mr. Seiber, in part:

"'Venus in Silk' was presented on a pedestal with four good legs to stand on. They were melody, color, a good story and delirious dancing . . . Robert Stolz created the music, but it has been brilliantly orchestrated and Americanized by George Hirst, and its Viennese zest infused with Yankee zip. There are some songs that haunt the ear, especially 'Baby, Play With Me' and 'Just for You.' There is Gypsy music, lured out of his violin by Bela Loblov, late of 'Reunion in Vienna.' And there is a Czardas, danced with vertiginous vim by Jack Cole and Alice Dudley. This pair put the paprika in the Tokay . . . Eccentric dancing by Gilbert Lamb and Audrey Christie won just as much rapture. The pair are a joy to eye and ear and heart . . . As the romantic lovers, J. Harold Murray and Nancy McCord put the thrill of youth and passion behind their scenes and into their songs . . . Voices were plentiful—every one of the principals sang well and the choruses were full of swing and quality . . . Perhaps the reader will suspect that the critic liked the show. Well, he just couldn't help himself."

So that's what Mr. Schwab is bringing to the National, eh? Sorry I told you if it will make your week-end drag.

Speaking of coming attractions, of the ten actors tried for the role of Paris in Katharine Cornell's production of Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet," which will be seen here beginning October 14, John Cromwell has been selected by Guthrie McClintic, the director, whose daughter, Sarah Haden, is the Aunt Martha in "O'Shaughnessy's Boy," opening today on the screen at Loew's Fox, and Hilda Spong.

Hilda Spong was a distinguished actress of her day and long has been known as a brilliant teacher of dramatic art. I can think of no one better equipped to perform this valuable function, so vital to the survival of the traditional theater, now the "the road," in the old sense, and "stock" are no more.

Fond Recollection Note.

Applause at those old Columbia Players performances was practically Spongtaneous, as you might say!

There Is Intrigue at Court!

In the roles of Nell Gwyn, the chorus girl who captivated a king, and Charles II, the victim of her wiles, Anna Neagle, noted British beauty, and Sir Cedric Hardwicke, distinguished English actor, left to right above, are said to have assignments to which they bring the full flower of their brilliant talents. "Nell Gwyn," picturized by British and Dominion from a story suggested by Samuel Pepy's diary, comes to the screen of the Belasco Theater tomorrow for its first presentation in the Capital.

Cromwell made his stage debut in "The Old Maid" last season, as Lanning Halsey, with Judith Anderson and Helen Menken. While attending St. Mark's School, in Southborough, Mass., Cromwell played the title part in "Hamlet." Later he was a member of the Harvard Dramatic Club. Last summer he appeared with the North Shore Players, in Lynn, Mass. His present engagement bespeaks a genuine talent.

Children's Studio Opens.

The Children's Studio of Speech and Dramatic Art will open its fourth Washington season tomorrow morning, October 5. The studio again will be located in the Burlington Hotel, where there is a stage and an audience of some 200 can be accommodated.

Rose Robison Cohen, director, has just returned from a considerable period of research and experiment on new plays for children in New York and has completed plans for the presentation of a series of plays and recitals during the coming season, thus giving each juvenile pupil an opportunity to participate in Little Theater work.

The curriculum includes the study of speech, voice culture, pantomime, monologue, poetry, story narration and play production. Enrollment is limited to children between the ages of 3 and 15, both inclusive.

Newsreel pictures of the first World Series game between the Chicago Cubs, of the National League, and the Detroit Tigers, of the American, played Wednesday in Detroit, went on the screen at the Warner Brothers Metropolitan Theater yesterday afternoon at 4:50 o'clock, little more than 24 hours after the last batter was out. The pictures were made by Paramount and show the highlights of the game. They will continue to be shown today and tomorrow.

And if you really go for sports pictures, those Baer-Louis fight films are still on view out at the State Theater in Bethesda, Md., and will continue to be, through next Tuesday. They are good enough photographically to have been made in a Hollywood studio—which, of course, they were not, although Mr. Baer probably wishes they had been!

Miss Spong Makes Offer.

To the great number of aspiring amateurs in Washington who seek careers behind the footlights, it will be of interest to know that the Hilda Spong Theater School, 9 East Fifty-ninth street, New York City, will offer a scholarship for the regular course in dramatic arts. Open to both men and women, auditions will be held on October 9, 10 and 11. The scholarship will cover full tuition for the school year from October 22 to May 26.

Appointments should be made in advance and students may obtain applications for auditions by calling at the school office or by letter. Members of the faculty will act as judges.

The director of the school has surrounded herself with a capable staff of professional instructors who likewise have had many years of stage experience. Among them are John Kirkpatrick and Donald Blanchard, directors; Edwin Strawbridge, dancing; Richard Whorf, makeup; Mrs. E. Irving Huntington, singing, and George Santelli, fencing.

Former Capital Favorite.

Guest directors of student plays for the 1935-36 term will include Earle Larimore, who opened here opposite Mme. Alla Nazimova in the Theater Guild's production of "The Good Earth" and was succeeded in the part by Claude Rains, now on view in "The Clairvoyant," on the screen at the Belasco; Burgess Meredith and Robert Ross.

Whenever the name of Sir Guy Standing bobs up in the press releases from Hollywood, as they constantly do, it is the custom of this department to hark back to the distant day when he was leading man of the old Columbia Theater Players, the most popular stock company Washington ever has known. Well, his leading women, 'way back yonder, were Charlotte Walker,

Hill Found Sane At Time of Quiz

Goes on Trial Monday in Atwell Slaying.

By the Associated Press.

Bel Air, Md., Oct. 4.—Kendall C. Hill, former hospital attendant, who will go on trial Monday for the slaying of Albert Atwell, Baltimore taxi driver, was adjudged sane today.

Alienists of the State board of mental hygiene reported Hill was sane "at the time of the examination." They did not comment, however, on his mental condition at the time Atwell was strangled to death and robbed last month.

State's Attorney D. Paul McNabb said he would not call Clifford Eugene Hale, former cell mate of Hill's here, as a prosecution witness. Hale offered to testify Hill admitted the slaying to him. He awaited word at Danville, Va.

Tract Given Hagerstown To Become City Park

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 4.—An eight-acre plot recently donated to the city by Thomas W. Pangborn is to be converted into a park, and will provide for both winter and summer sports. The Federal Government has just allotted $34,282 toward the construction of the park, the allotment being included in the list of projects receiving presidential approval.

Two lakes, fed by a stream which passed through the land, will be constructed, one to be used in the winter for skating, the other to be stocked with fish. Two athletic fields, one for baseball, the other for softball, with bleachers, and two tennis courts will be built. Work is expected to start within two weeks. The park site is located in the northeastern section of the city.

Frederick Theater Deal Is Closed

Movie House Purchased by Warner Bros.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Oct. 4.—Negotiations have been completed for sale of the Frederick Theater to Warner Bros., giving that corporation control of the last of the three movie houses here.

It is understood that the price was approximately $20,000. The stock is owned largely by Virginia interests.

The purchase is thought to have been stimulated by the fact that owners were bidding for a lease on the City Opera House, owned by the city and leased to Warner Bros. The lease is to expire next year, but Warner Bros. has petitioned for a renewal. Renewal of the lease had been held up by representatives of the Frederick Theater, who asked opportunity to bid for it.

Pat Hurly Will Speak At Church Exercises

Ashburn, Va., Oct. 4.—Former Secretary of War Patrick J. Hurley will speak here at the celebration October 13 of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of the Mount Hope Baptist Church. Other speakers at the all-day services include the Rev. C. Wirt Trainham, secretary of the Potomac Baptist Association; Paul P. Popkins, of Purcellville, son of the late Rev. George W. The Mount Hope Church was organized on August 24, 1835, by the Rev. Thaddeus Herndon and the Rev. W. F. Broaddus. Twelve pastors have served the church during its existence.

New Bail Plea Planned In Liquor Plot Case

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Danville, Va., Oct. 4.—A further effort will be made Monday to obtain bail for the 15 Franklin County men convicted of liquor conspiracy in Roanoke. They were recently denied continued bail by Judge John Paul, and were sent to Atlanta Penitentiary to begin their terms.

John W. Carter, attorney for the men, will appear before the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals composed of Justices Parker, Northcott and Soper and renew the application.

Pearl Medal Contest.

Lincoln, Va., Oct. 4.—A pearl medal contest will be held at the Goose Creek Friends' meeting-house at Lincoln Tuesday. Those who will take part include Helen Cradford and Mary Louise Simpson, Lincoln; Anne Norman and Milton Nichols, Purcellville; Helen Wynkoop, Wheatland, and Dorothy Keister, Hughesville. A. O. Hutton, principal of the Lincoln High School, will present the medal.

Coal Refused Italy.

Fairmont, W. Va., Oct. 4.—Coal operators in this region decline to fill orders for coal for munitions plants in Italy, not because of pacifist inclinations, but because they received no assurance of pay for the coal upon its delivery. They returned Italy's inquiries with diplomatic thanks.

The Federal Diary

Title Registered, U. S. Patent Office.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Morgan Baker.

LABOR Department's Athletic Association announces an ambitious platform for the 1935-36 season, under direction of Henry D. Edgerton, (F), Employment Service. The five salient points are:

BAKER.

1. Adequate locker and shower facilities.
2. Reduced rates at neighboring swimming pools and recreation rooms.
3. Reserved meeting and social rooms.
4. Semi-monthly meal tickets at discount from cafeteria.
5. Keep the library open until 6 p. m.

"A sports questionnaire including all activities, has been circulated through the department," Mr. Edgerton announced last night, "and more than one-third of the entire personnel replied, expressing interest in one activity or another. The association has received the full support of the department, and sports activities have been expanded to include all other social and beneficial ideas."

In the initiation of its program, the association has provided the means and support necessary for the formation of representative clubs—riding, swimming, baseball, softball, tennis, hiking and bridge.

The next major item is a dance which is scheduled for Saturday night at the National Press Club. Theater parties and other functions are being planned for the fall and winter.

Leaders assisting Mr. Edgerton include Abraham Asofsky (P), Bureau of Labor Statistics; Marvin Bloom, Grace Hudson, Mary A. Fenton (C), Chester Simpkins, Anne Larrabee, Isidore Altman and John Deck.

James M. Walter, assistant pathologist, Bureau of Plant Industry, has left for England where he will spend from two to five years studying the Dutch elm disease that has ravished thousands of oaks along the Atlantic seaboard. His headquarters will be at Oxford.

James Donahey, formerly with the Rental Benefit Audit Section, AAA, has accepted a position as auditor with the Soil Conservation Service.

The Patent Office Society will be host tonight at its annual autumn dance at the Congressional Country Club.

Elaborate Masquerade Planned.

A. G. Patterson (P), Federal Communications Commission, announces plans are under way for an elaborate masquerade dance Halloween night to be given by the Alabama State Society. Mr. Patterson recently succeeded Dr. Hugh G. Grant as president of the society, when the latter was appointed Minister to Albania.

E. R. Miller, chief accountant, and C. E. Miles, chief auditor, Bureau of Public Roads, are on an extended trip of two months through the Western States.

CHARTERING of two new local unions is announced by Miss Gertrude McNally (F), secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Federal Employes. They are located at La Crosse, Wis., and Petersburg, Va.

La Crosse Local, No. 538, is composed of employes of Commerce, War and Agricultural departments and is said to include a substantial number of the eligible workers at that station.

The Petersburg Local, No. 539, Miss McNally said, is made up of employes of the Federal Reformatory, and here also the charter application includes a high percentage of the eligible employes. H. Glenn Cunningham is president of Local No. 539 and J. P. Phillips is secretary-treasurer.

James Dillon (P), ECW division, Soil Conservation Service, is passing the cigars, following the birth of an 8-pound daughter last week.

Recipe for 'Honey Sweets' Wins First Prize in Post Contest for Mrs. J. W. Schutz

Paula Gruber, Mrs. L. H. Dennis Receive Second, Third Awards

Announcement of Results Made in Auditorium of National Electrical Supply Co., Followed by Demonstration of Best Dishes.

Originality won a Sunshine Mixmaster for Mrs. J. W. Schutz, of Arlington, Va., in The Washington Post recipe contest, results of which were announced at a cooking school in the auditorium of the National Electrical Supply Co. yesterday afternoon. From more than 2,000 recipes entered, her suggestion for "honey-sweets" was selected for first prize because, in addition to being delicious, the recipe was one that Mrs. Schwartz had worked out herself, Dorothea Duncan, food editor of The Post, said in announcing the award.

Second prize, a G. E. Coffee Maker, went to Miss Paula Gruber, of 1121 Twenty-fourth street, northwest, for a recipe for "Sour Cream Fruit Pie," and the third prize, an electric sandwich grill, was awarded to Mrs. L. H. Dennis, 9 Cleveland avenue, Takoma Park, Md., for an old English recipe, "Friar's Omelet."

Suspense gripped the crowd that gathered in the auditorium for the announcement of the prize winners. Each woman invited had won a weekly prize during the two months' contest and so was eligible for the grand awards. And there they were displayed on the platform, three pieces of modern electrical equipment that every woman present wanted to own.

Duplications Frequent.

A ripple of exictement surged through the audience as Miss Duncan stepped to the platform to welcome the guests of The Post and the National Electrical Supply Co., and to make the eagerly awaited announcement.

In judging the recipes submitted Miss Duncan said, duplications occurred frequently. This was natural, for a good cook book is the average woman's guide in preparing food for her family and the recipes it contains have been thoroughly tested, and are almost certain to be successful. Recipes submitted, she said, were uniformly good and so it seemed fitting that one that was not only delicious, but that displayed ingenuity besides should be awarded first prize.

All the winning recipes, previously tested by Miss Duncan, were demonstrated on the stage by Miss Carolyn Chesser, director of home economics of the Electric Institute of Washington.

The "Honey-Sweets," which the winner, Mrs. Schultz, discovered by experimentation, proved to be an attractive confection suitable for serving with ice cream or as a tea cake. The base is stale bread, left to stand overnight in honey and then covered with dipping chocolate and sprinkled with nuts.

Miss Chesser next demonstrated the sour cream pie which won second prize for Miss Gruber. The crust was made with a cup of thick, sour cream and any kind of fruit might be used as filling, Miss Chesser said.

The third prize winner, submitted by Mrs. Dennis, was interesting because it is an old English recipe and particularly delicious for an inexpensive dish. Despite its name, "Friar's Omelet," it is an apple pudding.

2 Other Recipes Demonstrated.

Miss Chesser also demonstrated two additional recipes not included in the contest. These were "Black Walnut Refrigerator Cookies" and "Almond Refrigerator Cake." During the demonstration she offered many helpful suggestions on the use of electrical refrigeration in making special recipes.

Souvenior copies of all five recipes were given out at the session so that the women in the audience could follow the demonstrations. A limited supply of these leaflets is available and may be obtained, while they last, by addressing Dorothea Duncan, in care of The Washington Post. This bulletin includes, besides the three prize winners, the refrigerator cake and cookie recipes offered by Miss Chesser, of the Electric Institute.

In concluding the session, Miss Duncan announced a new contest for candy recipes, in which the prizes will be Martha Washington candies. First prize will be a five-pound box of assorted chocolates and bonbons bearing the famous Martha Washington trade-mark. A three-pound box will be second prize, and a two-pound box of the same candy will be given the third-place winner.

The contest will last only one week, Miss Duncan said, and any type of candy recipe will be acceptable. All Post readers are invited to take part, and recipes should be submitted to Dorothea Duncan, in care of The Washington Post, by next Friday at the latest.

Candy Recipes Sought In New Post Contest

Like good candy? A five-pound box, from the famous Martha Washington shops, may be yours for the slight effort of copying your favorite home-made candy recipe and submitting it in The Post candy contest. A three and a two pound box of the same brand will be given as second and third prizes.

Any candy recipe is eligible. Simply send it to Dorothea Duncan, in care of The Post, in time to reach this office not later than Friday. Winners will be announced on the food page the following Tuesday.

Type of Bread Chief Factor In Sandwiches

Delicately Flavored Currant and Citron Loaf Is Suggested.

Interesting sandwiches are not always made so by an elaborate filling. Some of the most intriguing tea sandwiches, for example, depend almost solely upon the type of bread used for their appeal to the palate.

The woman who entertains frequently at tea depends largely upon an interesting array of breads rather than elaborate fillings for the sandwiches she serves. Nut or fruit breads, Boston brown bread, citron bread, etc., may be made into interesting sandwiches with a filling as simple as softened butter or cream cheese, marmalade or preserves.

Currant bread is a favorite sandwich loaf because it can be made so easily at home. Citron is often added for unusual flavor. Now we suggest a currant and citron loaf delicately flavored and tinted with a bit of saffron.

Saffron Bread.

½ teaspoon saffron
1 2-3 cups boiling water
2 cakes compressed yeast
¼ cup sugar
1 tall can irradiated evaporated milk
4 teaspoons salt
2 tablespoons melted butter
10 cups flour
2 cups currants
½ cup citron

Steep the saffron in boiling water for five minutes, and then strain.

Crumble the yeast into a large mixing bowl, add the sugar, and let stand until the yeast is liquified. Mix the saffron tea with the milk and when lukewarm, add to the yeast, along with the melted butter and salt.

All the flour goes into the mixing at once, and the easiest procedure is to work it thoroughly with the hands. Add the currants and citron. When the dough is well mixed, knead it gently in the bowl until smooth, round it up over the top, and set it to rise in a second, well-greased bowl. The latter should be carefully covered and set in a warm place which is free from drafts.

After about two hours the dough should have doubled in bulk. Knead it down at the end of that period. Then re-cover and let rise again, under the same conditions, until the dough is again double in bulk. This second rising should take about an hour.

Divide the raised dough into portions for four loaves and let stand for 15 minutes on a lightly floured board, covered to prevent cooling and crusting. Shape into smooth loaves and put into greased pans for a third rising, of 1 to 1½ hours.

Bake the bread in a hot oven, 450 degrees F., for 15 minutes. At the end of that time reduce the heat to 350 degrees F., and continue baking for another 30 to 40 minutes.

Frosted Graham Crackers.

Graham crackers spread with chocolate butter frosting make an ideal sweet for the child's lunch.

Meringue's Texture Is Important Factor

A fluffy, tender, and fine textured meringue is as essential to the success of a pie as a satiny smooth filling and a crisp, flaky crust. A good meringue will not water or shrink from the sides of the crust nor will it be flat and chewy.

The beating of the egg whites, the amount of sugar, the kind of sugar and the manner in which it has been beaten into the egg whites, and the baking temperature are all important steps in the making of a perfect meringue.

A nine-inch pie will require two egg whites and four tablespoons of granulated sugar for a sufficient meringue. Beat the egg whites until they are foamy throughout. Then add the sugar, two tablespoons at a time, and beat after each addition until the sugar is thoroughly blended. When all the sugar is added, continue beating until the mixture will stand in peaks. Pile lightly on a filled pie, and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees F.) 15 minutes.

Error in Recipe.

An error was made in the printing of Miss Janet Macht's prize-winning recipe for Pierogi. Women who are interested in trying this recipe will note that the dough is cut into four-inch squares instead of four squares, as the original printing of the recipe stated.

Post Recipe Contest Prizes Are Awarded

Dorothea Duncan, food editor of The Post, as she appeared at the cooking school yesterday in the auditorium of the National Electric Supply Co., with Mrs. L. H. Dennis, 9 Cleveland avenue, Takoma Park, Md., who won a General Electric sandwich grill.

Prize Recipe Played Part In Romance

"Honeysweets," the recipe which won a Mixmaster for Mrs. J. W. Schutz, of Arlington, Va., in The Post contest, had a romantic origin, her husband confessed, when told of the good news by telephone after the cooking school yesterday afternoon. While she was in college, Mrs. Schutz "invented" the confection and tried it first on the gentleman who was later to become her husband.

When The Post contest was announced, Mr. Schutz said, she recalled how much they have both enjoyed "honeysweets" ever since, and submitted it. Mrs. Schutz was unable to attend the school, as she is visiting in New York, but she will be delighted to learn that she won the Mixmaster, her husband said, as she never has had the pleasure of owning one.

Miss Paula Gruber, of 1124 Twenty-fourth street northwest, who won the G. E. Hotpoint coffee maker, is intensely interested in cooking, her mother, Mrs. H. Ahues, said, and follows The Post food pages constantly. Mrs. Ahues accepted the award for her daughter, who is on vacation.

A fine spirit was displayed by the losing contestants, many of whom stopped to chat with Dorothea Duncan, food editor of The Post, after the session. "I've tried in almost every contest for the joy of it," one woman said, "but I'm glad I didn't win a prize, for I am fortunate enough to own similar equipment, and I am glad to see the prizes go to some one who can enjoy them."

"More contests, please. We enjoy them." That was the consensus of opinion, and in response The Post offers an opportunity to win other prizes in a candy recipe contest, details of which are given elsewhere on this page.

Miss Carolyn Chesser, of the Electric Institute, demonstrated the use of the equipment given as prizes. In the absence of Miss Paula Gruber, 1121 Twenty-fourth street northwest, her mother accepted her prize, a G. E. Hotpoint coffee maker. A Sunshine Mix-master was awarded to Mrs. J. W. Shutz, of Arlington, Va., who was unable to attend the school.

Squash in Season.

Hubbard squash is making its appearance in the markets. One small squash averages about 5 pounds and yields approximately five cups of cooked mashed pulp. One cup of mashed pulp serves two persons.

A New Way to Fix Meat Sandwiches

Try this toasted meat sandwich and a crisp vegetable salad for an interesting October lunch. The meat sandwich which is rolled and then toasted is a real achievement and a pleasant change from the usual type of sandwich.

You will need the following ingredients: Two ½-inch slices of bread, cut lengthwise of loaf, 1¼ cups finely chopped cold boiled corned beef, 2 teaspoons minced onion, 3 tablespoons melted butter, 2 tablespoons prepared mustard and one-third cup mayonnaise.

Use bread as fresh as you can cut it evenly because the fresher the bread the neater the rolls. Remove crust and spread lightly with softened butter. Mix beef, onion and mayonnaise and spread on bread. Spread with mustard and roll up like a jelly roll. Cut each roll in four slices 1 inch thick. Place on a buttered baking sheet cut side up. Brush with melted butter and bake in a hot oven (400 degrees Fahrenheit) until crisp and toasted. It will take about 20 minutes.

2 Substantial Sunday Meals Recommended

Dinner Menu Features Dishes Prepared in Advance.

By Dorothea Duncan.

The woman who likes as much breathing space away from the kitchen as possible on Sunday, and still give her family attractive and well-balanced meals, will find the two meal plan an excellent one. The breakfast can be a substantial one that will offer the family enough sustenance to carry them over until a late dinner is served.

The dinner menu can be planned for simplicity and feature dishes that can be prepared the previous day. A meat loaf, for example, can be baked the day before and served sliced cold on Sunday. The addition of hard cooked eggs molded whole in the center of the loaf adds a pleasantly different flavor and a decorative note to the slices.

Potatoes With au Gratin Sauce.

Potatoes that can be cooked in their jackets on Saturday and served cubed and baked with an au gratin sauce just before serving eliminates the unwelcome task of peeling the vegetables on Sunday.

A salad, preferably of greens, should be included in your Sunday dinner menu. It will add that much needed freshness of color and flavor, and the work connected with its preparation is a task of but a few minutes.

Ice Cream for Dessert.

Ice cream is a made to order dessert for this type of meal because it demands no more time in the kitchen than it takes to place it in the serving dishes.

The leftover meat can be placed in the refrigerator and left for sandwiches for the members of the family who feel as though they need a snack about 9 o'clock in the evening. A large bottle of chocolate milk which can be served cold or hot, and some fresh fruit will add completeness to the pick-up meal.

The following menus for tomorrow have been worked out from the standpoint of simplicity and include dishes that can be prepared the day before.

Suggested Menus for Sunday

Breakfast.

Sliced bananas with sugar and lemon juice
Scrambled eggs Crisp bacon
Fried tomatoes with cream gravy
Hot biscuits (prepared flour)
Honey
Coffee Milk (for children)

Dinner.

Hard cooked eggs molded in meat loaf
Potatoes au gratin
Broccoli with lemon butter
Romaine and orange salad
Rolls (heated in oven) Butter
Vanilla ice cream with cherry preserves
Hot beverage Milk (for children)

Toys Out of Spools.

Empty wooden spools make excellent toys for small children. The creeping baby enjoys rolling them on the floor and chasing after them. Strung together on a stout cord he likes to handle them and bang them against a hard surface.

A New Prune Bread.

The American Molasses Co., of New York has worked out a formula for a new prune bread which is being featured by bakers. It is prune bread "with a prune in every slice," and contains a third of whole wheat flour.

Week-End Fete Planned Here For Halloween

Fireworks, Football Game and Parade Scheduled by Civic Committee.

The civic committee arranging the 1935 community Halloween celebration met yesterday and revealed that this year's observance will be a week-end affair featuring fireworks, football and floats.

Instead of confining the merry-making to the night of October 31, the committee is planning a bonfire festival for the next night, Friday, and a tieup with the George Washington-Rice football game Saturday.

For the first time since the program was introduced four years ago, the parade route will be along Constitution avenue instead of Pennsylvania avenue. The reviewing stand will be at Sixteenth street, where the King and Queen of Holloween will hold court.

The Queen will be selected by competition in which schools, citizens organizations and other groups will co-operate. Arthur Godfrey and Arch McDonald are being considered for the Kingship.

The committee, of which Harry H. R. Helwig is general chairman, will hold luncheon meetings at the Harrington Hotel each Friday until Halloween.

Young Scholar To Aid Simon In Work Here

Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld Appointed to Serve D. C. Congregation.

Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, student of Hebrew philosophy and graduate of the Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, Ohio, has come to the Capital to serve the Washington Herbrew Congregation as assistant rabbi.

At the college, he won, in addition to various honors in preaching and theological study, an appointment of fellow in philosophy. The fellowship had been named after the late Leo Simon, son of Dr. Abram Simon, whose assistant Rabbi Gerstenfeld has become.

The new assistant was born in England in 1904, and came to this country in 1917 with his father, Rabbi Samuel Gerstenfeld, who is now professor of the Talmud in a New York seminary.

Mr. Garstenfeld was married last year to the former Louise Mundheim, of New York. The couple spent their honeymoon traveling through the Near East as guests of desert sheiks. While there Rabbi Gerstenfeld did research on Jewish manuscripts in the field of philosophy and upon completion of his study he will receive the degree of doctor of divinity from the Hebrew Union College.

In addition to his theological training, Mr. Gerstenfeld has attended several schools in England, on the Continent of Europe, and in the United States. He did undergraduate and graduate work at Columbia, Chicago and Harvard Universities. He comes to Washington as one of the youngest pulpit speakers in the city.

Soap Attains State of Art In D. C. Store

Selection of Gifts Here Simple, With Large Field of Choice.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

SOAP deserves better than a ringside seat on the tub or sink this season. It's all dolled up for fall, and in some cases entirely disguised. Those dubious Thomases who maintain that soap is soap for 'a that should see the display in a local store. Here are soap pianos (midget size, of course) soap Scotties, hats, houses, grapes, chickens—and even soap eggs with whimsical, puckish faces.

And here's why. It seems that one of the buyers made a special trip to Paris to pick up interesting novelties to interest Washington shoppers. She came back with oodles of things, among them this fascinating family of soaps.

Quality Is Good.

Once you resolve to sacrifice your pet piano or bunch of grapes to the good cause of washing your hands you'll find that the quality of soap is all that could be desired. Price, 25 cents and up.

Gift Selecting Simplified.

Choosing a simple gift is made easy by a local store. Here you'll find a large table in the stationery department loaded with attractive items—and not one over $1. There's a stunning white ash tray supported by two black elephants, Scottie, and Indian book ends, large brass vases just primed for big bunches of evergreen, three-holder candlesticks, cocktail trays, cigarette boxes and even a small three-tier table. One of the most attractive things there is a large sandwich tray in a light-weight lacquered wood, covered with a pastel floral design.

Becoming Shower Caps.

Almost always a woman will vote for the tub in preference to the shower. Men can't understand why! Yet they would if they had marcel waves and intricate coiffures to watch over!

Women who would like mightily to find some means of protecting their hair while they enjoyed a shower will be delighted with the sureproof and becoming shower caps featured in a downtown store. They come in attractive little cellophane packages, modestly priced, in a variety of colors.

Hem Markers Are Aid.

MOST OF US who plan to give last winter's wardrobe an encore this year are confronted with the everlasting hemline problem. Since skirts are shorter then it's up to us to take our old ones and hoist them up the prescribed inch or two.

A local store aids us in this tedious task by offering a self-help hem marker. It's a simple little contraption that "can't go wrong." A ruler attached to a metal base stands upright on the floor. An adjustable clamp with chalk on it is fastened to the ruler. You set this at 12 or 13 inches (however short you wish your skirt), stand in front of it so that the fabric touches the chalk, and turn slowly. The chalk does the marking.

For the next few days these markers will sell for 45 cents. Later they'll be a bit more expensive.

New Cologne Arrives.

SOMETHING new and different in eau de colognes is that milky liquid with the devastating fragrance put out by a French perfumer whose knack for creating haunting scents amounts to double-barreled genius.

This new product deserves applause. It's really different and already slated for a successful season. You'll find it in attractive milky glass bottles with the name engraved on the outside.

The cologne itself is a thin liquid, a bit creamy. It's just right for anointing one's skin, since it contains alcohol it isn't in the least drying. You'll find it soothing and refreshing and the fragrance positively exhilarating.

Call Ruth Anne Davis, of The Washington Post, National 4200, Extension 323, for further information, or write, inclosing stamped, addressed envelope.

Women Are Urged to Unite In Fight Against Fascism's Menace to World Progress

By Malvina Lindsay.

Woman's Page Editor.

WOMEN OF ETHIOPIA are reported to be ready to fight side by side with their husbands. Women of America probably would do the same if it ever became necessary. But the more foresighted thing to do would be to fight the things that foment war. And not least among these is Fascism.

* * * *

What women are going to do about Fascism has become an imminent question. Nearly every boat, it seems, brings from Europe some feminist leader with warnings of the Fascist menace. One of the latest of these is Mme. Sonja Brantung, attorney and divorce mediator of Stockholm, Sweden. Fascism, she declares, is threatening the position of women everywhere and American women should be aroused before it is too late.

* * * *

Fascism offers a special challenge to women. It is their natural enemy. For in every country in which dictators have arisen feminine progress has been set back 50 years. However, the fighting of Fascism is more than a feministic concern. Women should rally their forces against it not alone because it imperials their own rights and progress, but because it glorifies tyranny, breeds war, curtails human freedom, and strikes at the roots of the political faith this country has been seeking for two centuries to conserve.

HOW THEN proceed to battle?

First, by holding on to the money bags, says Mme. Brantung. The Swedish feminist would like to see all women in the world self-supporting and independent "not living on the noblesse of men." That is the best way to attain legal respect, personal freedom, she believes.

* * * *

From the feministic viewpoint this is good advice. Women now should be militantly on guard against any legal or economic discriminations. They should fight doggedly—even shrewishly—to hold all the ground they have gained. For the Fascist offensive usually begins on the feminine front.

* * * *

But that is not enough. There are many other exposed battle areas. Women must lay the Fascist virus every time it manifests itself whether it be in such bridge table conversations as, "Well, after all Mussolini builds wonderful roads," or in definite social and political tendencies. They must fight it whenever in the guise of law or patriotism it threatens to curtail free speech, free assembly, free petition. They must likewise tell it when it parades as religious or moral bigotry, as academic or literary censorship or as industrial highhandedness and exploitation.

Through their many organizations women are the most articulate group in the Nation today. They are adepts at resoluting. Let them now say their say while they have the freedom to say it.

MOST OF ALL though, they should uproot Fascism from the soil of their own minds. Just as it is absurd for a women to work for world peace if she rows with her family, her neighbors and her club sisters, so it is preposterous for her to come forth as a savior of democracy if she is possessed of a Hitler or Mussolini viewpoint.

* * * *

Unless she is willing to famaliarize herself with the principles of democracy and practice them, her shouting of its creed will be a mockery. Unless she is willing to defend to the utmost the right of her opponent to voice his views—and not call him a Tory or a Red for doing so—she is unfit to pose as an exponent of Americanism.

* * * *

Name calling, class thinking, the bandying of smug phrases, the cultivation of the closed mind, fanatical patriotism to social group, political party, church, state or nation—these are sun and rain to the growth of Fascism. And these weaknesses women especially are heir to.

Democracy must mean more than a name to women if they are to defend it. It must be a religion practiced in their daily lives. Only then will it become a faith worth fighting for.

Science Ponders Curative Value Of Electricity

More Research on Short-Wave Treatment Is Held Needed.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

CAN we cook our bodies with short electric waves and destroy every vestige of disease? Most of us would be willing to submit to broiling, parboiling, or what not could we be assured that the procedure would relieve distressing symptoms.

For several years physicians have known and used short electric waves (high frequency currents) for the production of heat. The recent revival has come about through the application of very short waves varying in length from 3 to 30 meters. The treatment is now described under various names, such as short-wave diathermy, radiothermy, parathermy, ultradiathermy, and inductothermy. The ordinary diathermy wave which has been used for many years for the purpose of heating tissues is around 300 meters.

Last April the council on physical therapy of the American Medical Association issued the following statement: "Extravagant therapeutic claims have been put forward based largely on the writings of Erwin Schliephake . . . whose assertions have been not only unconfirmed in this country, but also partially refuted on the continent."

Heat as a remedy is as old as man and its present-day applications are legion. We know that through its use capillaries in the skin are dilated and that the mobilization of leucocytes from the blood in the presence of inflammation is accelerated. These phenomena we see every day.

We can also bring about a rise in the temperature of the body by preventing the escape of heat, or by applying heat from the outside, and some disease processes are influenced favorably by such procedures.

Just because short electric waves can heat the body that fact must not lead us to the conclusion that the body should be heated or that, if heated, disease will vanish.

Much controlled experimental work will be required before we can know the true remedial value of these shorter waves; when to apply them, for how long, and to what disease conditions.

NANCY HARKNESS.

HELEN M'CLOSKEY.

Mrs. Thaden, Miss Harkness, Miss MacCloskey Honored by U. S.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

PROOF WOMEN are carving a niche for themselves in the world of planes and pilots was recently established when three feminine aviators were appointed "air marking pilots" by the United States Bureau of Air Commerce.

All of these have had wide experience as fliers. Each holds a transport pilot's rating (which means she has had at least 200 hours in the air and has passed two written examinations), and each has been seriously interested in aviation a number of years.

One of the three, Mrs. Louise McPhetridge Thaden, of Little Rock, Ark., came into the aviation spotlight in 1929. At that time she attained an altitude of 20,270 feet at Oakland, Calif., was officially recognized by the National Aeronautics Association, and laid claim on a new altitude record for women.

Another record maker is Miss Helen MacCloskey, of Pittsburgh, who, in January, established a new speed record for women piloting light cabin planes.

"Flying Freshman."

The third, Miss Nancy Harkness, of Boston, won much publicity at Vassar a few years ago as the "Flying Freshman," and has been actively interested in aviation ever since.

Work for the three began as soon as their appointments were confirmed. They will travel throughout the United States to assist cities in arranging for the marking of roof tops with signs to aid airmen in flight. Mrs. Thaden's territory will be the South and West, Miss Harkness will visit cities in the East, and Miss MacCloskey will cover the Middle West.

Their activities will be coordinated and supervised by Mrs. Phoebe Omlie of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics, who has carried out liaison work for some time between the N. A. C. A. and the bureau of air commerce.

Discussing the program as it has been planned so far, Mrs. Omlie explained the purpose of the markings (which will be placed on roofs of buildings). "They will indicate the name of the town, the direction of the airport, or in case there is no airport, the direction toward the closest town having one," she said.

"An air route without markings is like a highway without highway signs. The commercial pilot generally knows his course thoroughly and isn't likely to get lost. But the private flier needs guidance. The markings will help him immeasurably, and if our plans work out as we hope, there will be 'air markings' to guide him every 15 miles"

Being much interested in a wide program to aid private flyers (and thus encourage the growth of the aviation industry), Mrs. Omlie is enthusiastic about the air-marking project. She believes, also, the recognition by the Government of women in aviation will encourage others of her sex to enter the industry.

"It is a field where women have the same opportunities as men, where men will co-operate with women and help them get ahead," she said. "So far, women have accomplished little in the industry because most of them still look on aviation as a pastime, a sport, not a potential vocation.

"The potential extent of aviation lies, of course, in the private ownership of planes. When the industry develops to the mass-production stage it will be as important if not as large as the automobile business. More positions for women as well as for men will then be available."

Mrs. Omlie a Pioneer.

Mrs. Omlie herself was a pioneer in the field of aviation. The first woman granted a transport license in the United States, she was also one of the first airplane saleswomen, the first woman to establish a flying school (this, in partnership with her husband, Capt. Vernon C. Omlie), and the first of her sex in any country to be chosen for a Government position connected with aviation.

Discussing aviation as a vocation for women, Mrs. Omlie said, "There's a lot more to being a successful pilot than just learning to fly. In fact, you can be an important figure in modern aviation without ever knowing how to get a plane off the ground. You can sell planes without flying them, of course. But you would probably be a better salesman for knowing how to fly."

In ten hours the average person can learn how to get a plane off the ground and land it, she explained. So there's really no excuse for a normal man or woman interested in aviation not knowing how to fly."

To girls looking to the air for a future, Mrs. Omlie advises: "First learn to fly, and stay at it until you get every license available. In the meantime, learn everything you can about the mechanics of a plane and the industry as whole. After you have a transport license you're just out of college so far as the industry is concerned. You'll be ready then to find a job. And there will be plenty of them, once aviation reaches the status of deveopment it deserves.

Child's Feeling Of Insecurity Causes Shyness

If Fear Complex Develops, It Will Take Years to Overcome It.

The following article is one of a series on home activities for children. Mrs. Bartlett, the author, is active in progressive education circles.

By Lenore K. Bartlett.

THE shy child is often a great problem, both at home and at school. Behind this shyness lies a feeling of insecurity. Somewhere along the line, the child of this type has been made to feel that his efforts are not quite worthy. Someone may have laughed at something he has done or said. Adults are often guilty of such behavior and children are often cruel to one another.

MRS. BARTLETT

In our efforts to help the shy child, let me emphasize the place creative activity holds. We become confident when we have done something which pleases us. We begin to feel the power within ourselves. By repeating this process, we gradually come to a belief in ourselves which results in confidence. Here is a concrete example of what I mean by this creative activity in the use of materials.

The Crying Child.

A mother came into my classroom one morning, with a little boy of six, crying as though his heart would break and tugging frantically at her skirts. The class had already assembled. This was unfortunate because the child's tardiness itself called attention to him. I did not want to upset the whole class nor attempt to argue with the child at that moment so suggested that the mother busy herself studying the children's art work on the walls and try to disregard the child. As long as the mother was in the room, however, the child continued to cry and the mother became more and more nervous.

As soon as possible, therefore, I left the class in charge of the student teacher, sent the mother home and took the weeping child by the hand, saying little or nothing to him. He went to the science room and spent 15 minutes or so, blowing glass. During this time our attention was centered on what we were doing and soon the tears dried up. When I suggested that perhaps the children in the class would be interested in seeing what we had made, the little 6-year-old was eager to go back to the room and clutched the glass tube in his hand as we returned to the other children.

By keeping the new child's mind off of himself and centered on what he had made, he was able to make a quick adjustment to the class and they all accepted him. He had created something which he could show the others and he felt that their attention was centered on that object as well as having the confidence which is brought about by having accomplished something which was satisfying to himself.

Parents can not be too careful about discouraging children. Their early accomplishments may not meet adult standards, but to the child they are real attainments. If we do not accept them as such, we may instill a fear complex which will result in a shyness that may take years to overcome.

For help in meeting any of your children's home problems write Mrs. Bartlett in care of The Post.

White House Device Keeps Lunch Warm

When President Roosevelt gets back to Washington he will be able to sit at his desk, insert a plug in the wall, and have his lunch served piping hot from a newfangled gadget that resembles a filing cabinet.

This device, to guard against the President's lunch turning into a cold buffet affair on those days he is unable to conclude his morning business in the customary three hours, is part of a $150,000 public works job of transforming the White House kitchens into an ultra-modern electrical culinary center.

Ever since he was inaugurated, President Roosevelt has had luncheon served at his desk in the executive offices. Such snacks have become as famous as Calvin Coolidge's breakfasts of griddle cakes and maple syrup. Cabinet members and out-of-town guests often sit in.

But now and then, the President has his attention diverted. When ready to resume lunch, the food is cold.

But the new gadget will remedy that. It resembles a filing cabinet with three spacious drawers. This will be wheeled from the kitchen on a rubber-tired tea cart to the President's desk. A wire plugged into the wall will turn on the heat.

Over in the enlarged kitchen there will be a hotel-size cabinet of the same design—big enough to hold and keep hot by electricity 150 full course meals.

Sweater and Skirt Sets Are Favored by Students

By Amos Parrish.

NEW YORK, Oct. 4.—"Scramble your own" is the fashion motto of many a smart young thing of grade school age. So they choose sweaters and skirts and jackets and blouses—mix them up with fine abandon—and thus achieve that casual "thrown together" look, so admired this season!

Many a fashion-knowing lassie is doing the Highland Fling these bright October days, and choosing plaids copied from the authentic plaids of Scottish clans. In colors merry as a Highlanders kilts! The young lady sketched at the upper left has topped her wool plaid skirt with a wool jersey slipover sweater. The skirt is copiously pleated to give her plenty of freedom of action.

Sweater and skirt suits make elegant outfits for brisk mornings when the frost is on the pumpkin. The one sketched above is a classic. Simple of line—yet the ribbed effect makes it distinctive.

Twin sweater sets are perennially popular with practically all ages. Many of the new ones boast bright color accents. The pull-over of the set sketched is decidedly livened up by the touches of vivid red and blue.

And Jackets.

When the mercury drops lower, snug jackets will be much in demand to pull on over the sweater and skirt. Perhaps leather jackets with shiny leather buttons and "postman" pockets strapped securely shut!

Navy is the outstanding color for these sweaters and skirts . . . because it's "regulation" for many school uniforms. This season, however, many youngsters are borrowing grown-up colors like wine red and rich Renaissance green.

No stopping these young ones, they certainly know their fashions!

"Illiteracy" In College Increasing

BECAUSE young people no longer have to dig for knowledge but can get it through the radio and the talkies, they are facing the danger of becoming more illiterate than their predecessors, Dean Virginia C. Gildersleeve, of Barnard College, believes, in her annual report she said:

"Are we right in feeling that the present student is rather more illiterate than were the students of the past? Has this condition, if it exists, much to do with our college requirements or does it grow out of the state of affairs noticed in the schools also—that is, the rapidly diminishing amount of reading done by our young people?

"Instead of taking things in through the eye and becoming familiar with the aspect of English words, they take them in through the ear, by the radio and the movies. This has a lamentable effect on their spelling and on some other aspects of their writing."

Remarking that most students take "far too many courses" and spend too much time "running vainly from class to class," Dean Gildersleeve also announced the appointment of a committee to begin a "reconsideration of our system of points and courses." Declaring that the point system was "in many ways a curse," she said "it would be well if we could limit the number of courses and make more of them larger units."

Dean Gildersleeve reported that the marriage rate of the college's graduates was rising.

Glass Niches Strike New Decorative Note

Glass niches strike a new note in modern rooms.

The glass reflects the room and makes it appear much larger than its actual size. Glass shelves form an excellent setting for a favorite collection of china figures, colored glass, porcelain animals or what-have-you.

Flowers placed in these niches are reflected and add a note of color.

On Vacation.

During the absence of Miss Mary Haworth on vacation, her column, "The Business of Living," is temporarily discontinued. It will be resumed the latter part of October.

CULBERTSON on BRIDGE

RECENTLY I saw a bridge game which was as amazing as it was amusing. Speed and speed only was the watchwork. The four players sat poised gingerly on the edges of their chairs. The cards were dealt furiously. The bids poured out with a machine-gun staccato. From the moment the first card was led the pasteboards swirled upon the table in a frenzied blizzard, the tricks being played and hauled in so rapidly that I grew dizzy trying to follow them.

Offhand, I'd say each deal was disposed of in a maximum of three minutes and ten seconds flat, including the shuffle.

As a race against time it was an unqualified success, but unfortunately contract bridge does not pay off on a Sir Malcolm Campbell basis. Three hundred miles an hour may make a speedway champion, but six tricks a minute will hardly win a crown of skill for a bridge player. Yet a great deal of that sort of bridge, only slightly less extreme, is played constantly. The first lead is made, dummy is exposed, the declarer who prides himself on his mental agility takes a hasty glance, spends almost thirty seconds forming his complete plan of campaign, and then charges ahead on a bull-like rampage. Sometimes, but not often, he awakens to the fact he might have made his contract or garnered an extra trick had he been a little more careful and a little less hasty. He is much more apt to curse the adversities of distribution—which he could have foreseen, or the unfortunate lay of certain cards, which he could have overcome—when a bit of real thinking would have solved his troubles. The chances are there would have been no troubles if he had stopped to think.

Only a player with the card genius of my rival, Hal Sims, can afford to play with that lightning-like rapidity which characterizes his game. Even then I saw him drop tricks which subsequently he had enough leisure to repent.

Careful, clearly conceived play is not necessarily expert play, but it is a close relative and, certainly, it is the solid foundation for expert play. Too often games are lost or contracts defeated when nothing more than extreme care rather than extraordinary skill was demanded. Carelessness is responsible for many more failures than ignorance.

When it seems that declarer must lose a trick in trumps and also a trick in a side suit, the careful declarer looks for a chance to make the holder of the high trump ruff in ahead of him. Then he can discard his side suit loser on the opposing trump.

West opened the diamond king and dummy's ace captured it. When South now took the queen and king of spades the bad break showed him a trump loser. He also had a loser in each other suit, making four in all. So he led a diamond. West won, returning a club. Dummy's ace took the club and South ruffed a diamond. Then he took the club king, the heart ace and the heart king. This left him in dummy, from which he led a diamond. East was helpless. If he ruffed, South would discard and have two good trumps left. If East discarded South would ruff with his low trump and the spade ace would win his tenth trick.

Toys Influenced By U. S. Campaign On Public Enemies

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 4.—The martial spirit—long predominant in the play room in the form of toy soldiers and cannon—masquerades in the modern nursery behind imitation "Tommy Guns" for baby "G-Men," a survey of the toy industry showed today.

But despite the recurring demand for play-room armaments, it is a bold American manufacturer or dealer who features them, one New York dealer admitted.

James L. Fri, managing director of the toy manufacturers of the United States, gave as an example of the tendency to substitute on the "A-B-C" blocks the letter "S" for "Scout" instead of the time-honored "soldier."

"The peace motif has been hammered home by parent-teacher associations and other parent groups," he said.

PLEASANT HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THERE ARE a lot of things that a lady can afford to give in about—political arguments, for instance, and altercations with the laundryman. But when it comes to the matter of her house and her furniture, it's smart to be adamant.

Because that new table and the color of your chintzes have more permanence and will bother you long after a point of hypothetical discussion is forgotten.

L. E. V. WRITES: I'm trying to decide about new dining room furniture and I don't want to make another mistake. When we married I was talked into some awful stuff by a friend—I've never been able to find out even what style it is! Anyway, I've never liked it. Now, then, what I really want is Sheraton mahogany—the question is, will it look as bad 10 or 15 years from now as my present things do? And I love bright floral chintzes—would they be suitable at the windows if I get the Sheraton?

* * * *

ANSWER: In the first place, it seems extremely unlikely that Sheraton furniture would ever really look bad because it is a classic style and belongs to the richest period of furniture design. So, if you like it, I think it is just about the safest choice you can make from the point of enduring beauty. Yes, chintz would be quite appropriate for the draperies in a Sheraton dining room. Send a stamped self-addressed envelope for our new bulletin, "Fabric Recipes for Tired Rooms"—it may give you fresh color ideas, as it includes samples of fabrics and wallpaper.

Man Is Held In Schoolboy Prank Killing

Youth Shot With Rifle After Boys Tapped Upon Window.

Thought Someone Was Tampering With Car, Suspect Says.

By the Associated Press.

Lonaconing, Md., Oct. 4.—A coroner's jury recommended today that Owen Bittinger, 27, be held for the fatal shooting of William Staup, 14, Central High School student.

The jury's recommendation came after it heard testimony and held young Staup died of a rifle bullet wound inflicted by Bittinger.

The student, son of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Staup, was shot in the head last night near Bittinger's home, Buck Hill. The families were friendly neighbors.

Boys Tapped At Window.

Bittinger told officers he was aroused by boys rapping at his window and tampering with his parked auto. Officers said he fired a rifle from his porch.

Leslie Staup, a cousin of the dead boy, and Earl Andrews said they saw Bittinger on the porch with a rifle in his hand as they passed his house on the way home from downtown. They heard a shot, they said, and William Staup collapsed near them, a bullet in his skull.

Three others said they saw Bittinger fire the shot as lights of their auto swept the porch. They were Thomas Vinci, John Timney and Miss Mary Staup, also a cousin of the dead youth. Vinci took the youth to the office of Dr. E. Don Taylor, who pronounced him dead.

Taken From Bed.

Bailiff Henry Ralston said Bittinger was in bed when he went to arrest him. Ralston quoted Bittinger as saying he was awakened by his baby's crying and that when he arose, he thought he heard someone tampering with his car.

Ralston said Bittinger told him he returned to bed without investigating after his stepdaughter, Miss Lulu Jenkins, told him someone had been shot.

Wright Quits Warden's Job In Maryland

Quenstedt, Ex-Mayor of Annapolis, Named to Replace Him.

Rift in Administration of Gov. Nice Is Ended by Resignation.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore Oct. 4.—A rift in the administration of Gov. Harry W. Nice ended today when Dr. J. LeRoy Wright resigned as warden of the house of correction and was promptly replaced by Walter A. Quenstedt, former Mayor of Annapolis.

The resignation was accepted by the board of welfare, under the chairmanship of Charles J. Butler, a Republican. The same board appointed Quenstedt.

Four months ago Butler blocked an administration attempt to force the substitution of Quenstedt for Wright in the house of correction post. Quenstedt was Gov. Nice's candidate for the appointment.

Wasn't "In Sympathy."

The board did not make public Dr. Wright's letter of resignation, which was sent to Butler shortly before the meeting. However, it was learned that Dr. Wright said he was leaving because he was not in sympathy with the board.

Commenting on his appointment in a prepared statement immediatly after it was announced, Quenstedt said:

"I shall carry out the policies of the board of welfare. I will not permit politics to interfere with my work or enter into the organization to its detriment, nor will I do or say anything which will interfere with, weaken, or destroy the merit system. Such changes as are deemed advisable by the board and myself will only be made with the advice, consent and approval of Col. Harry C. Jones, State employment commissioner. I ask a suspension of judgment in order that my work in that institution may speak for itself."

G. O. P. in Majority.

The first attempt to place Quenstedt at the house of correction was made last June, shortly after resignations from the board of welfare had permitted sufficient Republican appointments to give that party a majority.

However, Butler declined to place the matter of ousting Dr. Wright before the board, and the administration plan fell through. At this time Butler said: "Dr. Wright seems to be filling the bill all right and on that basis I see no reason for any change."

Apple Rates To South Cut, Effective Soon

Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland Orchardists to Benefit.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, Va., Oct. 4.—A reduction in freight rates on apples shipped to the Southeastern area from Virginia, West Virginia and Maryland has been approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission and will be effective Monday, W. S. Campfield, secretary of the Virginia Horticultural Society, announced here yesterday.

This reduction, ranging from 15 to 30 per cent, will be a great benefit to apple producers from this region, Campfield said. The rate cut has been sought for several years by the Virginia and West Virginia horticultural societies.

In commenting on the reduced charges, Secretary Campfield advised orchardists not to ship poor quality apples and thus lower their standard on the Southern markets. He reports that the Southern markets are being flooded with poor quality and cull apples hauled by truck and that shipments of this kind upset the plan of distribution outlined for the benefit of apple growers in the three States.

Talk of War Fails to Spur Tobacco Sale

600,000 Pounds Bought in Day on Market at Danville.

Prices for Lower Types Still Disappointing to Farmers.

By the Associated Press.

Though speculation was heard at Danville on whether Virginia growers might respond to war talk in Europe by selling their higher grade tobacco quickly, little actual change was noted in conditions on the Old Belt bright tobacco markets yesterday.

Continued pressure of low grade offerings was ascribed by tobacconists as the reason for average prices disappointing to farmers, though desirable types were said to be bringing satisfactory returns.

The "break" on the Danville market yesterday was approproximately 600,000 pounds. The official figures on that market for Thursday were 482,022 pounds sold at an average of $18.88.

At Petersburg the trade saw an upward trend yesterday, with predictions that the approximately 40,000 pounds on the floor would net two or three cents more a pound than the $14.70 per hundred weight average for the 39,062 pounds sold Thursday.

Col. A. B. Carrington, exporter and former president of the Tobacco Association of the United States, expressed the opinion at Richmond that a general European war might materially affect the demand for Virginia tobacco but that the Italo-Ethiopian conflict alone could hardly have any bearing on the market.

'Umpire Moriarty Beat Us,' Assert Cubs, Charging Revenge

Gallico
Says Too Bad Somebody Had To Lose Game

By Paul Gallico.

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—It would take a book, not a mere newspaper colum nto tell o fthe ball game here today—volumes one ,two and three ,a set. The ebb and flow of battle won't stay on newsprint. It would take chapters to describe the hair-breath escapes, the magnificent catches, the brave offensive thursts that went for nought ,the hits that were timely, and the failures that were not, the rocking and swaying of 45,000 parsons in the grip of great drama ,and the great chorus they sang to accompany the fight on the diamond below.

And then you would be just at the beginning. There were enough in individual heroes to stock a Pantheon. There were rows on the field, magnificently gestured ejections by umpires, pinch hitters, relief pitchers. Both teams came from behind. No matter which team you rooted for, you left the arena completely exhausted by the struggle. It was too bad some one had to lose. It was nice that the Tigers fought it out to win, 6-5 in the eleventh inning.

It was one of the most exciting ball games I have ever seen. At last the fencing and feinting is over. The two teams are really locked. They ripped and snorted and snarled over this one like the animals they represent over a kill. The desperate rhythm of struggle swayed crowds and players alike. Every move on the field in those late, taut innings made hearts slip beats, pressed the organ stops of the crowd, releasing treble screams of excitement; the bat and ball were merely the medium of expression of grit, tenacity of human will to win.

HEROES were made and unmade by the handful. The name of Augie Galan would have fired the war off Page 1 here had the Cubs won. He made one of the greatest catches ever seen in any ball yard in the third inning to cut off a certain Tiger run and perhaps the beginning of a winning rally.

He stepped to the plate in the ninth inning and drove in the tying run with a vast sock to center field, a long fly ball that let the ponderous Klein lope home. But Galan tonight is just a good kid who played in a brave and thrilling ball game, because his team didn't win. Jo Jo White, the Tiger lead-off man, made his only hit of the game in the eleventh inning. It was a single and it drove in the winning run.

Look at the pitchers who were tied up in the struggle: Lee, Warneke and French for the Cubs; Auker, Hogsett and Rowe for the Tigers. Who was the hero? Rowe? Y-y-y-y-es? He came in the ninth inning with a two-run lead, and, like firecrackers, singles rattled off his pitches from Hack, Klein and O'Dea, the last two pinch-hitting. When you get pinch hitters who hit, then you have a real ball team.

ONE out and the tying run on third base in the person of Chuck Klein. Galan at bat. See how the turn of events, the lithe movements of the fighting players made and broke heroes on the spot. Could Rowe keep that run from the plate and win the ball game? Crack! That long fly of Galan's going out to center field! An easy catch, to be sure. But the tying run scored. Galan is the hero; Schoolboy Rowe the goat.

The goat? Not at all. The game isn't over yet. The Cubs must win to stamp their heroes as certified, solid gold. Both sides had produced prodigies of baseball under fire. But one must lose, and one must win. It was like a golf match that was all square at the thirty-sixth hole. All the great things that had been done before didn't count. They were just so much newspaper copy.

The game was starting afresh, Rowe against French, the last two pitchers. Forget about Galan's catch, forget about Demaree's great running catch and double somersault with the ball, forget about Hartnett risking getting himself brained on the dugout roof to snag Auker's foul. Never mind the four-run attack of the Tigers in the eighth. When the Cubs came to bat in the tenth inning it was 5-5, a new ball game except for hte sudden death angle of the Chicagoans' batting last.

Who's the hero now? Lindstrom opens the tenth with a double. Man on second and none out. Now real men are in the making. Hartnett bunts him to third. Man on third and none out. Demaree and Cavaretta and Demaree coming up. Demaree has had a home run. Cavaretta is due for a hit. And the winning run sits on third. Now you can forget Rowe giving those two runs when he had the ball game won.

Now Rowe is in command. Rogell throws out Demaree. Gehringer throws out Cavaretta. The run dies on third. It's still a new game.

THE weak end of the Tiger batting order is up. Rogell singles. Owen forces him with a poor bunt. Flea Clifton, Tiger substitute third baseman who has played a brilliant game all afternoon, slaps one at Lindstrom, now playing third base. The scorers call it an error, but it looked more like a hit. Now the Tigers have men on first and second and Schoolboy Rowe is up. Can he hold his hero role? He is supposed to be a heavy hitter. Three swings and Rowe is back in the dugout, miserably unhappy. He could have won the game that he thew away in the ninth. Jo-Jo White bats. The

Cursed Men, Chicagoans Declare
Called Them Names as American League Got Even, They Add.

'To Hell With Umpires, Get the Tigers,' Says Manager Grimm.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, Oct. 4.—Boiling with rage, the Cubs charged Umpire Moriarty with wearing a Detroit uniform as they stormed and muttered to themselves after reaching their dressing room today with the sting of a 6-5 lacing burning in their hearts.

"Nobody else but Moriarty beat us today," screamed Gabby Hartnett, the Cubs' big catcher. "If he hadn't chased Grimm, Woody English and Stainback out of the dugout we would have won. When it became necessary to make replacements in the tenth, English wasn't there to go in for Jurges. Moriarty saw to that. The American League got even with the National League because Quigley chased Baker out of the game in the sixth for beefing on Quigley's decision when Fox was caught off third by my throw."

Cursing Is Charged.

Larry French, the Cubs big left hander; English, Jurges, Coach Roy Johnson, John Corriden, another coach and other Cubs charged Moriarty with cursing them, reflecting collectively, on their ancestry, when he rushed to the dugout to quiet the screaming Cub players after he had called Cavaretta out trying to steal second in the sixth.

Corriden, a modest, quiet veteran of the diamond, said he never heard such language from an umpire.

"He was guilty of antagonizing and demoralizing out ball club," Corriden blurted. "He beat us as sure as you're a foot high."

Overstepped Authority.

Grimm, ordered off the bench with Stainback and English, declared that Moriarty overstepped his authority.

"What were we supposed to do, lay down and die out there?" he asked. "If a manager can't go out and make a decent kick, what the hell is the game coming to. I didn't swear at him but he swore at us. If he makes the same decision again otmorrow he'll have a chance to throw me out again."

"Hang with 'em gang," Grimm yelled to his muttering players. "You guys are better than they are. We'll get even with 'em tomorrow. To hell wiht the umpires, get the Tigers. I never used an umpire as an alibi in my life and it's too late to start now. Those decisions and beefs are all part of a ball game."

Wasn't Game Enough

Little George Stainback said he was chased out of the ball game because he resented Moriarty's curse.

"When he called us a name I told him 'get your hands out of your pockets and 'bear down,' but the guy wsan't game enough."

Grimm viewed the ball game, along with English and Stainback, through a hole in the clubhouse door. When Moriarty chased them, Grimm drove his fist through a panel in the door so he could watch what was going on on the ball field. It was from this spot that he directed his players with Coaches Corriden and Johnson carrying out his orders.

Start Carleton.

Grimm said he would start James "Tex" Carleton, six-foot right-hander, aganist the Tigers tomorrow.

In sharp contrast to the Cubs dressing room, the Tigers were whooping it up. Manager Cochrane said it was the toughest World Series game in which he ever had played.

"What a battle it was," the long-nosed, red-faced Cochrane said. "There were so many things going on out there that I don't remember what happened when Moriarty chased Grimm and theo thers out of the game. I don't know why Quigley should have chased Baker. Why Baker didnt even swear at him. He just grabbed Guigley by the arm.

"It was a big game for us to win today. It was the toughest World Series game I've ever played in."

Real Tiger Game.

"Yeow——" hollered Bill Rogell across the dressing room. "That was just another of those real Tiger games—that's all."

"You're telling us," yelled back Coach Cy Perkins and Pitcher Elden Auker in unison. "We've started hitting—watch us keep on going."

Cochrane intends to start Alvin (General)Crowder, veteran right-hander, against the Cubs tomorrow. He has been one of the four starting Tiger Hurlers this year and has won 16 games.

Schoolboy Rowe, the winning pitcher, was as happy as a kid, and kept running around the dressing room, slapping teammates on the back. He was a schoolboy on a holiday, and for all the clothes he had on he might have been heading for the old swimming hole.

Fair and Milder, Series Forecast
Temperature of 54 Seen for Tdoya's Game.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 4.—Fair and somewhat milder weather for the fourth game of the World Series tomorrow was predicted today y J. R. Lloyd, Government weather forecaster.

Fans were advised not to mislay their overcoats and mufflers, however, as he expected a game-time temperature of 54, only 7 degrees higher than prevailed when play started today.

The skies will be clear, he said, and there will be variable breezes, mostly westerly, and not so strong as those which had the outfielders making erratic dashes for windlown fly balls today.

showers as the 45,532 set up a raucous chorus of boos, and the management of the Chicago team thus devolved on its third leader of the day—sawed-off John (Red) Corrigan, a coach.

Three Players Bagged.

Moriarty bagged three players during the game. First to feel his umpirical wrath was Del Baker, the Tiger's coach, who talked himself into banishment in the sixth inning with his vigorous protest of a decision at third, when Pete Fox was picked off the base by Hartnett's snap throw.

Baker, spouting defiance and all but laying heavy hands upon Moriarty, finally returned to the Tigers' bench, but umpire-in-chief Bill McGowan spotted him there, called time while he ordered the coach to quit the park entirely.

But the umpire baiting was only an uproarous show of the ball game in which thrills went begging. In a stirring ninth-inning rally, with two Chicago pinch hitters, Chuck Klein and Jim O'Dea, transporting Cub fans into ecstasies with solid singles against the great Schoolboy Rowe, the Cubs scored twice in a last-ditch stand to tie the score.

The Cubs will start "Tex" Carlton in the pitcher's box tomorrow, while the Detroiters will depend on the hurling of Alvin Crowder. Chicago fans consider tomorrow's game the crucial test of the series. There is yet hope for the Cubs, who this year have been notoriously lucky when caught in a tight squeeze.

Greenberg Out of Game.

The Tigers entered the game today without big Hank Greenberg, the embodiment of the heart of their batting punches. Greenberg, on the sidelines with a left hand so swollen he could not close it as a result of a crude slide into the plate in yesterday's game at Detroit, was replaced at first base by Marvin Owen, the regular third baseman.

Thus the Tiger infield was scrambled, with Flea Clifton, a diminutive substitute, playing at third, but neither Owen nor Clifton disgraced his predecessor despite an error recorded against each of 'em. As if to the positions born, they backed up Tiger pitching.

Here at Wrigley Field, the Cubs had led a charmed life during the National League pennant race. It was here they won 57 of their 77 home games and compiled the first 19 victories of their sensational 21-game winning streak. But their luck ran out today, clubbed into submission by the Tigers and then smothered by the pitching of Schoolboy Rowe in the extra innings.

Best vs. the Best.

It was the best vs. best. The Cubs used three big shots of their pitching staff in a vain effort to save the ball game. Lon Warneke, the four-hit conqueror of the Tigers in the opening game, followed Bill Lee to the mound in the eighth inning and it was against him that the Tigers applied the finishing touches to a four-run uprising that gave them a 5-3 lead.

Then it was that Rowe found his way into the game to protect that two-run lead through the eighth and ninth inning. Manager Mickey Cochrane was shooting his best into the fray. The two runs that Goose Goslin had driven over the plate with a bristling single that caroomed off first base in the eighth inning, would win for the Tigers if Rowe could hold the Cubs.

But he couldn't. After Cavaretta, still hitless in this series, had flied to Fox, Stanley Hack drilled a single to center field. Then the Cub pinch hitters swung into action.

Klein Pulls a Fast One.

Chuck Klein, home run king of the big league a few years ago, now relegated to pinch-hitting duty, missed a home-run swing against Rowe and then changed his tactics, cleverly pushing a single to left that put Hack on second. Thus the tying run was on base with one out.

Up to the plate strode Jim O'Dea to pinch for Warneke and delight the fans with a sharp single to right that scored Hack, put Klein on third. Little Augie Galan was up in this crisis. Author of two previous hits, he smashed a towering fly into deep center field and Klein trotted home after the catch to deadlock the game. Rowe checked the uprising when Herman grounded to Clifton.

The Cubs delighted the stands with an early inning assault against Elden Auker, the side-arming right hander, that produced two runs. Frank Demaree slammed his second home run of the series, a prodigious push into right field, to open the second inning, and, with one out, Hack prolonged the rally with a single to left. He stole second and eventually scored on Warneke's grounder to Gehringer after Clifton was shamefully credited with an error on Jurges' smash down the third base line.

Cubs Lead 3-0 in Fifth.

The Cubs had a 3-0 lead at the end of the fifth when Jurges, who walked, scored on Lee's sacrifice and Galan's single to right, but Lee had been leading a charmed life.

In the third inning, after Cochrane had walked and Gehringer had singled, Augie Galan delivered Lee from danger with an amazing catch of Goose Goslin's lusty line drive, which Galen at first misjudged and then caught with a one-handed leap as he crossed in front of Lindstrom in center field.

Again in the fifth the Cubs, who apparently could do no wrong in their own park, saved Lee from being driven from the box. Lindstrom raced far into left field to drag down Clifton's vicious slam that was headed for the fence and later in the same inning, after White had singled, Frank Demaree produced the fielding feat of the day on Cochrane's line drive to right. Demaree raced far in, plunged headlong to the ground and came up with a mouthful of turf—and the ball.

The proceedings began to lean a bit to the weird side in the sixth, when dumb base running by Pete Fox choked off what had loomed as a fulsome Tiger rally. Goose Goslin singled to right for the first of his three hits, and Fox lashed a fine triple to the right-field corner to score Goslin and cut the Cubs' lead to 3 to 1. But, with only a long fly needed to bring him home, Fox took too great a lead off third base and Gabby Hartnett, with a swell snap throw to Hack, picked him off the sack cleanly.

It was then that Coach Del Baker, at third base, raised such a fuss that he wats ejected from the game. But none could save Lee from the power in the Tiger bats in the eighth, not even Warneke. The pitcher who had led the National League in the percentages during the season, dug his own pitfall when he watlked White, with none out, but the tension was eased when Cochrane popped up. It was laced tight in a trice, however, when Charley Gehringer bashed a long double to right field that put White on third and the tying run on second.

Goose Bats Two Home.

Here, Goslin, hailed before the series as the Tigers' best "money player," justified that soubriquet. Swinging viciously on a curve ball he pulled it down the first-base line. It struck the bag, bounded over Cavaretta's head for a single and both White and Gehringer scored to deadlock the game.

Cub fans took heart again as the great Warneke stroke to the mound to relieve Lee in this crisis. But Pete Fox immediately sowed the seed of doubt with a single past Jurgest. With Goslin on second, worrying Warneke with his gestures toward stealing third, Bill Rogell drove a single through the box which Warneke was in no position to field and the Tigers went ahead, 5-4, when Goslin scored on the blow, which advanced Fox to third. And then the 45.532 sat in on one of the strangest World Series development in recent years, with the goat's horn sprouting from the tender skull of Phil Cavaretta, the Cubs' rookie first baseman, who conjured memories of the famous Heinie Zimmerman-Eddie Collins chase of the memorable 1917 series.

Rogell darted for second on a double stead attempt with Fox otn third, but Hartnett's throw to Herman was so perfect that Fox made no attempt to score as Rogell was trapped. With Fox holding close to the base, Herman tossed the ball to Cavaretta, who gave chase to Rogell, with nary a thought of Fox's presence on third. Too late, the rookie realized his faux pas. Before Cavaretta could catch Rogell in the race to second Fox was so close to the plate any play for him would be wasted and thus the Tigers scored a run that was to prove so precious.

You know how the Cubs tied the score in the ninth, how Hack, Klein and O'Dea pounded Rowe for singles that netted two runs, but Rowe achieved a return to his greatness as the game wore into extra innings.

French had turned the Tigers back runless despite Goslin's double, with two out in the tenth, and then Rowe met and won a cevere test. Lindstrom led off the Cubs' tenth with a screaming double to deep center and was on third with one out when Hartnett sacrificed, but Rowe was now invincible. The dangerous Demaree could only ground to Rogell and Cavarette was thrown out by Gehringer.

In the eleventh the Cubs' scrambled infield, with Lindstrom playing third and Hack shortstop—a move necessitated by the withdrawal of Jurges for a pinch hitter—bogged down. Fox led off with a single through shortstop that Jurges doubtless would have fielded.

From Hero to Bum.

Lindstrom, playing thrid base in a World Series for the first time since 1924, then produced a masterful play when he pounced on Owens' attempted sacrifice and forced Rogell at third, but he descended from heroism to bumhood almost in a twinkling when he permitted Clifton's soft grounder to roll past his glove into left field as Owens raced to second.

Lee struck out Rowe and had two strikes on White when the Tigers' center field produced the winning hti, a single to center field. Even then the game might not have been lost had Frank Demaree fielded the ball cleanly. It was sharply hit, Demaree charged in quickly and with his good accurate arm might very conceivably have thrown Owen out at the plate, but when he juggled the ball momentarily all was lost, and Owen scored standing up.

In protecting that one-run ead in the eleventh, Rowe was supreme. Hack grounded to Clifton, and the Tigers' big right-hander sealed their triumph fittingly by striking out Klein and Pinch-hitter Odea.

Lily Harper Takes Title in 19th Hole
Shoots Par 5 on Final to Defeat Mrs. Clark.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 4.—Nineteen-year-old Lily Harper, of Portsmouth, won her second consecutive women's State golf championship today, but she had to go 19 holes to shak e off the persistent challenge of Mrs. David Clark, of Washington, a former champion.

In a nerve-tingling duel they reached the turn all even and they battled furiously down the stretch, with neither ever enjoying more than a single-hole advantage. Mrs. Clark squared the match at the seventeenth and halved the eighteenth, but the nineteenth hole, the same one that tripped her at the outset, cost her the mach, as she soared to 6 and lost to Lily's par 5.

Eastern Victor Over Gonzaga High, 19-0

By John R. Vosburgh.

USING its opponents' passes as well as several effective ones of its own, Eastern High yesterday trounced a scrappy but buttered-fingered Gonzaga High eleven, 19 to 0, before close to 1,000 student fans at Eastern Field. It was Eastern's second victory over the little Jesuit school in the last five years.

The result was easily a sdecisive as the score indicates, but does not reveal the strength of a hard-tackling Gonzaga forward wall which matched the Eastern line defensively from start to finish. But the Gonzaga backfield was unable to match either its line or the Eastern backs in point of quality.

It was a fumble by one of the Gonzaga ball-carriers in the first minute of play which paved the way for the first Eastern touchdown and was merely one example of the manner in which the Purple backs were handling the pigskin as if it were a hot potato.

Mrs. Hill Wins Keefer Cup Golf Title

MRS. BISHOP HILL, of the host club, won the Keefer Cup golf tournament yesterday at Chevy Chase's course. She finished the two-day 36-hole medal handicap event with a net of 164 to nose out Mrs. Harrison Brand, jr., also of Chevy Chase, by one stroke.

Mrs. Hill added a 93 to her 97 of the first round. Her handicap was 13.

Mrs. Brand had 89-88-12—165.

The low gross prize went to Mrs. Betty Palmer Meckley, of Indian Spring, who had two brilliant rounds of 86-85 for a 171 total. Mrs. Meckley scored her 85 yesterday despite a terrific wind that caused the scores of the 90 contestants to skyrocket.

Central Bows To W. & L. by 7-0 Score
Drive From Midfield in Third Period Wins for Va. School.

Highly Favored Capital Team Held Despite Aggressiveness.

By George Considine.

SPURRED on by the cheers of a sizable bulk of the Washington and Lee student body, Coach Johnny Baker's Little Generals outmaneuvered the highly favored Central football machine yesterday at Central Stadium to win by 7 to 0. An enthusiastic gallery of close to 3,000 spectators witnessed the battle.

With barely a minute to go in the third quarter Washington and Lee had the ball exactly in midfield. Like a well-lubricated piece of machinery Carr snapped it back to Half Back Jimmy Fixx, who lateralled to Bragg, who in turn lateralled to Ray Wheeler. And before you could whistle "The Washington and Lee Swing," Wheeler had scooted around right end and had deposited the ball on the 20-yard line.

Hippler Scores.

Fixx fixed the stage by plunging through to the 12-yard stripe. On the next play Full Back Hippler, running with the abandon of a locomotive, smacked left tackle and sprinted the remaining distance to score the only touchdown of the game. Eddie O'Brien kicked the extra point.

After Central had zoomed the opening kickoff, the first quarter seemed to point to a decisive Central victory. Fixx fumbled on the first play and the Blue and White recovered. All during the period Central was in command, advancing to the 15-yard line by virtue of the indomitable plunging of Billy Richardson.

But the Little Generals held them every time, mainly because of the stellar tackling work of Bobby Hippler. Washington and Lee then took the ball on their own 30-yard line and as the quarter ended had wiggled it to midfield.

Resuming activity in the second period Central again threatened. Billy Vermillion got loose for runs of 12, 8 and 6 yards to place the oval on the 15-yard line. But here the Thirteenth Streeters might just as well have been trying to smash a brick wall.

Virginia to Oppose Davidson Veterans

Special Dispatch to The Post.

University, Va., Oct. 4.—Davidson's football team that comes to play Virginia in Scott Stadium at 3 p. m. tomorrow will be vastly different in gridiron strength from the last Wildcat eleven played by the Cavaliers in 1921.

The Carolina Presbyterians this year present a strong squad with a first team composed almost entirely of seniors. They are bringing 26 players to Charlottesville. Fourteen years ago, when the teams last met, Virginia defeated Davidson, 28 to 0, before a crowd of 2,500 which was the largest that had been seen in an opening game on Lambeth Field.

The probable Virginia-Davidson line-ups:

Dundrillin Wins Laurel Chase in Thrilling Finish, Pays $29.50

Daily Double Nets Betters $84.20

Sullivan, Capital Boy, Rids Tuxpan, $133, to Victory in 4th.

them. To most of those present, it appeared that they were drawing a chariot across the green infield.

The rivals arrived at the finish line by different methods. Anchors Aweigh, the favorite in the field of eight that began the journey, was always prominent. Clifton's Queen, a former half-miler on the flat, had been leading at one stage but had dropped back. Dundrillin, the ultimate winner, failed to make anything that resembled a move until approaching the last jump.

But they were all three there at the finish, digging their heels into the turf and struggling for all they were worth.

Dundrillin, ridden by one S. Veitch, was an ugly duckling in the betting and the mutuel of $29.50 was the expected. Clifton's Queen was also a long shot at 15 to 1.

In fant, the feature race was sent into third position among the day's happenings when an all-Washington combination won the fourth race at a mutuel of $133. The most important member of the firm was Tuxpan, a game son of Volta and had never before won a race. Jockey Jimmy Sullivan, little northeast boy, was in the saddle. Selby Burch, the Capital sportsman, is the owner and trainer. Tuxpan, paying the longest price of the fall season in Maryland, ran Celebrant, the early pacemaker, into defeat and then went on to score a handy decision. Celebrant was forced into the third money by a closing rush of Gala Dame.

Vanderbilt horses had everything their own way in the scheduled feature race. Balcony ran first all the way and Cherry Stone was second all the way, leaving the third money for the others to fight for in the field of 12. The minor end of the battle was won by Ugin. Money flowed in streams on the Vanderbilt pair and a mutuel of $3.40 was displayed.

An $84.20 daily double cheered a limited number of followers of the twin wager. Parva Stella in the first and Steward in the third teamed to produce the pay-off.

The cerise and white of the Vanderbilt stable was borne to victory by Parva Stella in the days' opening event. Handled by Lloyd Knapp, the filly opened up a wide gap on the backstretch but had to be coaxed during the last sixteenth as Aura and Grand Knight made rushes for the wire. Parva Stella was an odds-on favorite and paid $3.40.

Steward proved a successful paddock tip in the third race, his odds dropped fast and he ran accordingly, being eased up at the finish ahead of Carmino Real, the favorite, and R. Pinchot. The winner paid $11.40.

Naval Cadet came off the pace set by Politen to take the sixth race at a mile and a quarter. Politen hung on for second and Golden Play was third. Naval Cadet paid $4.30.

The favorite players were successful again in the seventh race when Cherokee Sal came from far back to defeat Sock Dologer and Jane Ellen to pay $4.70.

Furled Flag's stretch rush decided the issue in the final and brought a $5.60 mutuel.

PARVA STELLA sprinted into a commanding lead shortly after the start, saved ground wherever possible, but began to tire after reaching the home stretch and had to be shaken up to resist AURA. Latter bettered her position on the outside, responded readily to stiff ursing for the final drive and was going gamely at the end. GRAND KNIGHT, fractious and delaying the start, came gamely after dropping back at the turn. LADY CARROT was hard ridden all the way. BENGAY was unable to threaten seriously at any stage. SIT OUT could not enter contention. BLACK SCOUT tired.

DUNDRILLIN, reserved off the pace for the first turn of the field, gained swiftly in the last six furlongs, came up on the inside of the leaders coming to the final fence, then finishing fast on the flat, was up in the concluding strides. CLIFTON'S QUEEN, prominent from the beginning, had a lot taken out of her racing with LEI, but came again and fought it out stubbornly while finishing between horses. ANCHORS AWEIGH challenged strongly going to the twelfth fence, made a bad landing, but recovered. He took a slight lead thereafter, but faltered nearing the end. LEI took a short lead when ANCHORS AWEIGH landed badly at the twelfth fence, was bothered at the turn for home and fell back steadily. KEPI was outrun. WALTER K. lost his rider at the thirteenth jump, and BRAD lost his rider at the first.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—STEWARD, $11.40, $9.80, $6.40; CAMINO REAL, $3.70, $3.30; R. PINCHOT, $6.80.

STEWARD, displaying high speed, assumed command midway of the back stretch, moved clear at the final turn, shook off CAMINO REAL entering the home stretch and came out swiftly when shaken up in the last furlong. CAMINO REAL raced strongly from the beginning, made a strong effort when approaching the home stretch, but weakened badly in the closing drive. R. PINCHOT raced forwardly and closed with excellent courage during the closing stages. SINGING HEART went well placed and had no excuses. SUPREME COURT lacked early speed. RED BADGE tired early. MISS PREMIER showed a flash of early speed.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—TUXPAN, $133.00, $22.90, $11.80; GALA DAME, $3.10, $2.70; CELEBRANT, $5.00.

TUXPAN, prominent in the early stages, challenged strongly to wear down CELEBRANT when straightened into the home stretch, then under stout pressure came out slowly nearing the finish. GALA DAME, away clear, but lacking speed to maintain her early forward position, improved her position on the outside and came strongly nearing the end. CELEBRANT was hurried to the front soon after the start, had good speed to lead the way, but tired in the last furlong. BUDDY BOO moved up strongly approaching the home stretch, but failed to better his position nearing the finish. RED PETE finished with good energy. SAXOFAL could not reach forward position. DARK WHISK broke well, but lacked speed. STAR TURN had brief early speed.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALCONY, $3.40, $2.80, $2.40; CHERRY STONE, $2.80, $2.40; UGIN, $3.60.

BALCONY, quick to begin and kept under urging, met a strong effort from CHERRY STONE when reaching the home stretch, responded readily for the final drive and came out nicely when reaching the end. CHERRY STONE went strongly in the first half-mile, made a stout effort entering the home stretch, but weakened during the closing furlong. UGIN, hard ridden from the beginning, could not threaten seriously when forced to a stout drive in the late stages. SON OF TROY was unable to better his position while saving ground. IRON ORE came through on the inside at the stretch turn and closed gamely. ALIT swung wide into the home stretch. FLYING FALCON broke slow and was never a factor. STEEL TOES had speed. OUR CREST dwelt when the start came and was away very slow.

NAVAL CADET, strongly restrained for the first mile, went to the front without effort when nearing the home stretch, moved clear and finished with speed in reserve. POLITEN raced strongly while setting the pace, saved ground until displaced by the winner, then held on gamely to stall off GOLDEN PLAY. Latter, on the inside until reaching the home stretch, held on resolutely under punishment. PATIENT WAY won in the thick of contention, but could not improve his position. BENDROMEL and LONE MISS were outrun.

CHEROKEE SAL, permitted to gain her best stride, worked her way up stoutly in the last half-mile to enter contention, reached the pacemaker when straightened into the home stretch, then came out slowly in the last sixteenth-mile. SOCKDOLOGER, strongly reserved in the first six furlongs, took the lead in the stretch ground, but could not resist the winner. JANE ELLEN went strongly for six furlongs and held on well when the real test came. BARNEY SEXTON raced well placed, but could not stay in the closing drive. KHELABOO trailed far back most of the journey. BRAW SCOT had no excuses.

FURLED FLAG, saving ground during the early running until reaching the leaders, went to the outside when swinging into the home stretch and closed stoutly and was up in the last 70 yards. SUN ABBOT, going forwardly, responded gamely when placed to a drive and held on tenaciously until the finish. CHANCE DAME raced prominently early, then came courageously on the inside during the stretch drive. CORA KAY was used up chasing DALMATIA and she tired. DALMATIA had good speed while leading for the better part of the trip, but faltered in the final issue. CALORIC and POST BRIGADE were outrun.

Freight Loads Are Cut Deeply By Coal Strike

Drop Reported for Week Is 76,873 Cars, or 10.9 Per Cent.

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended September 28 totaled 630,771 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was a decrease of 15,313 cars or 2.4 per cent below the corresponding week in 1934 and a decrease of 38,415 cars or 5.7 per cent below the same week in 1933.

Loading of revenue freight for the week of September 28 was, however, a decrease of 76,873 cars or 10.9 per cent below the preceding week this year, largely due to the strike of bituminous coal miners.

Miscellaneous freight loading totaled 270,315 cars, a decrease of 475 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 25,805 cars above the corresponding week in 1934 and 32,332 cars above the same week in 1933.

Loading of merchandise less than carload lot freight totaled 167,228 cars, an increase of 598 cars above the preceding week, and 2,618 cars above the corresponding week in 1934, but a decrease of 8,559 cars below the same week in 1933.

Coal loading amounted to 62,997 cars, a decrease of 70,237 cars below the preceding week, 60,757 cars below the corresponding week in 1934, and 69,749 cars below the same week in 1933.

Grain and grain products loading totaled 39,196 cars, a decrease of 3,356 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 6,582 cars above the corresponding week in 1934 and 7,638 cars above the same week in 1933. In the Western districts alone, grain and grain products loading for the week ended September 28, totaled 27,486 cars, an increase of 6,051 cars above the same week in 1934.

Livestock Decrease.

Livestock loading amounted to 18,299 cars, a decrease of 200 cars below the preceding week, 12,246 cars below the same week in 1934 and 3,953 cars below the same week in 1933. In the Western districts alone, loading of livestock for the week ended September 28 totaled 14,646 cars, a decrease of 11,244 cars below the same week in 1934.

Forest products loading totaled 32,450 cars, a decrease of 608 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 9,476 cars above the same week in 1934 and 6,690 cars above the same week in 1933.

Ore loading amounted to 33,609 cars, a decrease of 2,701 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 11,741 cars above the corresponding week in 1934. It was, however, a decrease of 1,975 cars below the corresponding week in 1933.

Coke loading amounted to 6,677 cars, an increase of 106 cars above the preceding week and 1,468 cars above the same week in 1934, but a decrease of 839 cars below the same week in 1933.

The Eastern, Allegheny, Southern and Northwestern districts reported increases for the week of September 28, compared with the corresponding week last year, in the number of cars loaded with revenue freight, but the Pocahontas, Central Western and Southwestern reported decreases. Compared with the corresponding week in 1933, the Eastern, Southern and Northwestern districts reported increases, but the other districts showed decreases.

Freight Gain Expected In Fourth Quarter.

Freight carloadings in the fourth quarter of 1935 are expected to be about 6.4 per cent above actual loadings in the same quarter in 1934, according to estimates just compiled by the 13 shippers, regional boards and made public yesterday.

On the basis of these estimates, freight carloadings of the 29 principal commodities will be 4,805,388 cars in the fourth quarter of 1935, compared with 4,515,835 actual loadings for the same commodities in the corresponding period last year.

Pipe Line Sues Old Board for $18,303,436

Francis I. du Pont and Frank P. Parish Among the Defendants.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 4.—Alleging that the former management owes the Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line Co. $18,303,436, Thurlow G. Essington, receiver, filed suit in Federal Court today for an accounting.

Frank P. Parish, the "boy wizard of finance," who created the company, and Francis I. du Pont, of the Delaware industrial family, were two of nine former directors made defendants.

Essington charged the directors permitted Frank P. Parish & Co., a securities concern, to sell $27,000,000 in "Mo-Kan" stock, much of the proceeds being used to "rig" the stock market. The concern repaid only about $9,000,000, he claimed.

The bill alleged that du Pont early in the company's brief history, was given 1,000 shares of stock in a subsidiary for no consideration.

Some of the transactions which the suit charges were "negligent and wrongful," came under court scrutiny when Parish was acquitted several months ago of mail fraud.

Other defendants are Charles A. Meyer, Ralph B. Mayo, Ralph B. Crandall, S. J. Maddin, C. S. Shippey, James F. McManmon and Burt R. Bay.

Stock Prices Rebound On London Exchange

London, Oct. 4 (AP).—Prices rebounded in the stock exchange today, breaking a succession of several days of declines attributed to nervousness over the Ethiopian conflict.

Armament and aircraft issues featured the recovery, but gilt-edged issues also joined the movement, with British government bonds recovering substantially. The 2½ per cent consols rallied a full point to 81¾.

Housing Loans $167,986,593, New High Mark

Third Quarter Business Exceeds First Two Quarters Combined.

Totals for the third quarter of the year, reported by private financial institutions doing business under the Federal Housing Administration's modernization credit plan and mutual mortgage insurance plan, reached $167,986,593. The previous high, established during the second quarter, was $115,491,060.

Included in the record-making volume was 222,685 modernization and repair notes, having a value of $75,727,777, and 24,302 mortgages selected with appraisal fees paid, valued at $92,258,816.

Cumulative grand totals, representing the entire volume of business done since the start of operations of the Federal Housing Administration have now reached $353,241,767.

Commenting on the report, Administrator Stewart McDonald pointed out that, in place of indicating a seasonal decline, the third quarter business was greater than the total dollar value of business done in the first two quarters combined.

September totals for both types of business aggregated $57,875,275, which in itself was also a record figure. Included in this total was still another new high mark. The total of modernization and repair notes insured during the month being $30,403,177. Mortgages selected with fees paid for appraisal during September totaled $27,472,098.

War Risk Rates Jump at Lloyds

London, Oct. 4 (AP).—The boom of guns in east Africa was echoed in brokerage marts here today, with Lloyds reporting a huge number of inquiries for war-risk insurance.

The sharp rise in rates saw quotations go as high as 75 guineas per 100 pounds (approximately 75 per cent) for insuring against war between any two European countries before the end of the year.

Rates for insuring against the calling up of all British naval reserves within three months were quoted at 25 guineas per 100 pounds, a rise of 15 guineas over a week ago.

Stocks Advance but Run Into Profit Taking Which Cuts Gains—Lire Finds Support—Wheat Declines.

By Carlton A. Shively.

New York, Oct. 4.—Security markets gathered strength, as the financial community settled down to a routine reading of the conflicting war communiques. Stocks reached their best prices early in the afternoon, with leading issues selling 1 to 3 points higher. Then profit taking took away part of the advance, but it left a majority of stocks higher on the day. Turnover was around 1,400,000 shares. Bonds were higher, with Government issues receiving Treasury support. Commodities also rose. December wheat closed ⅜ of a cent higher at 106⅝ cents a bushel.

In the foreign exchange market, as well as in the security markets, the fact of the war appeared to be less painful than the anticipation of it. Fundamentally the longer the fighting goes on the worse will become the financial position of Italy, but for the moment support came to lire, through the Bank of France, and the quotation picked up a little, after its bad fall yesterday. Sterling, on the other hand, was again weak, which probably brought more gold to the Bank of France. Francs were steady.

The outlook for a strong quotation for dollars during the period of nervousness over the fate of foreign currencies, coupled with the prospect for some increase in our exports on account of raw materials destined for war use, may yet bring up a reconsideration of our dollar policy, whatever that may be. Doubtless the friends of further devaluation will not let this opportunity slip to press their case, and particularly so since Great Britain is opposed to stabilization at this time.

Excess Credit

It is becoming increasingly likely that the big factor in this country's business life and in its markets is going to be the use of the surplus supply of bank credit. The precarious position into which currency depreciation has forced the gold standard countries, and the worsening of that position by the flight of capital incident to war alarms, is hastening the day of reckoning for this country.

Merely on the Treasury operations, involving the borrowing and expenditure of many billions in carrying out the unbelievably extravagant and wasteful relief and pump-priming projects of the New Deal, including the direct farm doles and other boon-doggling of a less realistic nature, excess bank reserves of credit have been built up enormously. The Treasury has obtained comparatively little money from investors as such, but it has been granted billions through the easy process of writing up on bank books a deposit in favor of the Treasury.

Those deposits have been checked out by the Treasury, and the money redeposited with the banks, building up demand deposits to great heights. Demand bank deposits are money, only awaiting further use. Use for commercial and speculative purposes so far has been only moderate, and the excess reserves have only made it easier for the Treasury to require more deposits based on bank reserves, thus adding to bank reserves and continuing round the circle.

Danger of Inflation.

That is only half the story. The remainder is largely the unprecedented flow of gold to this country. Gold has come in because in part of de facto stabilization of the dollar at too low a value, of exchange of gold for silver in our silver purchasing act, of the squeeze on the gold standard nations effected by our dollar devaluation, which has sent their currencies to a point that has caused them to lose gold, the pull of gold here because of the war scare, increasing the fear of seizure of hoarded gold and of the devaluation of the gold bloc currencies, and finally the natural pull of the United States, with its vast industries and with its currency, which compared to European varieties, still looks safe.

Imports of gold so far have not done much to increase credit in use, although by preventing deflation their effect has not been negligible. In future, and perhaps in near future, it looks impossible to prevent some of the huge supply of gold from setting to work. This week's addition to our monetary gold stock was $117,000,000. In the last month more than $250,000,000 has arrived, and in the last year nearly $1,500,000,000 have been added to the supply, which is now almost $9,500,000,000.

The year's addition to gold would alone support a staggering expansion of credit. Some safeguards surround a possible credit inflation. The Federal Reserve Board is vested with certain powers to cut down bank powers to lend money and to stiffen the money market. Unfortunately the exercise of any such powers would first hit the Treasury in its borrowing program, by far uncompleted. Nothing is likely to be done, at least not until too late. Some expansion of bank credit, which would mean improvement in business, is much needed; but once it starts in good earnest it can be only hoped that it won't go too far.

Fifth District Reflects Rising Business Trend

Larger Deposits, Fewer Failures, More Employment.

Most of the business indicators in the fifth Federal Reserve district show that trade in August and early September was fully up to seasonal level, and agricultural conditions are quite favorable for comparatively large cash returns to farmers in the fall.

In banking, total earning assets at the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond rose slightly between the middle of August and the middle of September, and the circulation of Federal Reserve notes increased seasonally with the opening of tobacco markets and the beginning of early fall trade.

Member bank reserve deposits also increased last month. Regularly reporting member banks slightly increased their loans between August 14 and September 11 and materially increased demand deposits, but time deposits declined slightly and investments in stocks and bonds were lowered.

Debits to individual accounts figures in banks in leading trade centers in the four weeks ended September 11 showed a decline of 2.9 per cent in comparison with debits in the preceding four weeks, but exceeded debits in the corresponding four weeks of 1934 by 10.9 per cent.

Commercial failures in the Fifth district in August numbered only 39, compared with 51 in August last year, but liabilities last month totaling $1,431,207 compared unfavorably with liabilities amounting to $440,675 in August 1934 insolvencies.

Employment did not change materially in August and early September, but the changes that did occur were favorable.

Construction continues to improve in the Fifth Reserve District, both the number of permits issued and the estimated valuation in August this year exceeding the August, 1934, figures, and contracts actually awarded last month nearly doubling the August, 1934, contracts in value.

Retail trade in August averaged 7 per cent above the volume of trade in August last year, measured by sales in 31 leading department stores in the Fifth District, and wholesale trade in groceries, hardware and drugs also exceeded the dollar volume of trade in the corresponding month a year ago, but dry goods and shoe sales were smaller in the 1935 month.

Acacia Wins Honor.

The Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co. has won a place as one of the 50 direct mail leaders in the United States and Canada for 1935, an award of the Direct Mail Advertising Association. This is the fourth year Acacia has been given this honor. Acacia is said to be the only life insurance company to have received the Direct Mail Advertising Association award four times.

E. M. Thore, assistant counsel of the Acacia, is scheduled to deliver a paper before the legal section of the American Life Convention at Chicago Monday, October 7. The paper is entitled, "Right to Offset Mortgage Indebtedness Against Death or Disability Claims."

Gold Rush Follows Find in Finland

A gold rush has started in Finland, according to the European correspondent of the American Chemical Society here.

"A race to the extreme northern part of Europe has recently begun, particularly to Lapland, where gold has been found, following the discovery during the past year in the Petsamo region on the White Sea, of rich nickel deposits of excellent quality, estimated at 7,000,000 tons, and the beginning of their exploitation by the British nickel trust," the correspondent declared.

"Gold probably occurs over the entire region stretching from the Gulf of Bothnia obliquely across Lapland to the Arctic Ocean. Gold has been found in two small rivers, Ivalo-Elv and Lutto-Elv, which rise on a high ridge north of the Arctic Circle. The Finnish gold mining company, Lapin Kulta O. Y., holds extensive concessions on the Lutto-Elv; it has now passed into the hands of the Swedish Boliden Mining Co.

After deducting preferred dividend requirements, there remained $2.84 on the common stock against $2.67 a share on the common stock last year.

Herbert A. Wagner, president, stated that the volume of electricity sold by the company so far this year established a new high record for output.

New York, Oct. 4 (AP).—A more active foreign demand lifted the price of export copper to 8.775 cents a pound today with one sale reported made abroad at 8.80 cents. This is an advance of .10 of a cent a pound and the highest level attained by export copper in the current upward move.

Domestic metal remained unchanged at 9 cents a pound. Dealers reported an active demand.

Unemployment Declines 2.2% During August

Idle Total Is 9,901,000, 3.2% Less Than a Year Ago.

New York, Oct. 4.—The total number of unemployed workers in August, 1935, was 9,901,000, according to the regular monthly estimate of the National Industrial Conference Board, made public today. This is a decrease of 220,000, or 2.2 per cent, from the preceding month, and a decrease of 322,000, or 3.2 per cent below August, 1934.

From July to August, 1935, the decreases in unemployment, by industrial groups, were: manufacturing and mechanical industries, 272,000; mining, 9,000; transportation, 4,000; domestic and personal service, 2,000; and miscellaneous industries, 7,000. Unemployment showed an increase of 47,000 in trade.

Compared with August, 1934, unemployment in August, 1935, decreased 14.4 per cent in manufacturing and mechanical industries; 6.2 per cent in domestic and personal service; 2.6 per cent in transportation; and 3.7 per cent in miscellaneous industries. Unemployment increased 5.8 per cent in mining and 0.4 per cet in trade.

Air Lines Make Giant Strides In Pay Traffic

New York, Oct. 4.—Traffic over American air lines has continued to set new high marks during the current year and, despite generally low mail rates, operating results have improved notably. Barring temporary interruptions, chiefly due to unseasonable weather, further important growth of the business is forecast by the Standard Statistics Co., of New York, in a current survey.

A total of 367,357 passengers were carried 160,013,192 passenger-miles during the first half of 1935, according to the Aeronautical Chamber of Commerce. Although comparisons are distorted by the fact that schedules were seriously interfered with early in 1934, following the domestic mail contract cancellations, 64 per cent more passengers were carried in the first half of 1935 and passenger-miles increased 80 per cent. Express traffic was more than 76 per cent better, while mail volume, totaling 6,080,843 pounds, was nearly three times the artificially depressed figure for the first six months of last year.

Moreover, the trend continued upward this summer, which normally is the most active season. July showed gains of 87 per cent in passenger-miles, of 94 per cent in express and of 64 per cent in mail volume, as compared with 1934 totals.

London—With traders discarding their nervousness, the stock exchange recorded a better tone today. Repurchases caused gilt-edge securities to advance ½ to 1¼ points and strengthened most other sections, including transatlantic issues. Armament and aircraft shares were the feature of the industrial section. The market closed firm.

Paris—Prices were stronger on the bourse today, with the market calm, as short interests covered due to war uneasiness. Rentes, industrials and international issues advanced. The closing was improved.

Berlin—Viewing the Italian-Ethiopian developments rather calmly, the boerse opened a trifle lower, owing to limited sales. The closing was sustained.

Daily Oil Flow Dips in August By 21,600 Bbls.

Average for Month Is 7 Per Cent Above a Year Ago.

By the Associated Press.

The Bureau of Mines reported today production of crude oil in August was 84,816,000 barrels, or a daily average of 2,736,000 barrels.

This average was 21,600 barrels below July, 7 per cent above a year ago, and 81,000 barrels above the recommendation of the bureau for August. The excess of daily average production over the recommendation in August (81,000 barrels) was slightly below the excess in California, indicating, the bureau said, that production east of California was below the recommended level for the first time since November, 1933.

Production in all leading States except California and Louisiana, declined in August. The daily average California output increased to 600,100 barrels after what the bureau said was a breakdown of proration in some fields. Louisiana production continued to set the records, and the State attracted attention because of developments of the new Rodessa field. East Texas production changed slightly, but declines in other districts caused a reduction in the daily average for the State from 1,074,100 barrels in July to 1,059,600 barrels.

Withdrawals from crude stock continued heavy as refinery operations were reported to have been maintained at high levels. The bureau said that despite an increase in the yield of gasoline by cracking the average declined from 45.3 per cent in July to 44.8 per cent in August. The domestic demand for motor fuel in August was 42,901 barrels, an increase of 10 per cent over August, 1934.

The price index for petroleum products for August was 52.4 compared with 52.9 for July and 51.6 for August, 1934.
